"Books to Share" the Title of Olive Hormel's Lecture

In her lecture, "Books to Share," Mrs. Olive Hormel, of the Olive Deane Hormel Book Store, spoke of the desire for "books to share" at this time of the year.

There are two kinds of books of that type: one that is of the nature of a "book to share" and the other that is of the nature of a "book to read."

Rebecca West's monumental study of the people of Yugoslavia, "Black Lamb and Grey Falcon," was given first place on Miss Hormel's list of such books, as one of the most richly descriptive and informative of the works of recent years.

Van Wyck Brooks' new book, "Opinions of Olive Alston," is next on her list, and from this she quoted: "A great man is one who has lived a life of the highest quality and has left a mark on his nation and his mankind."

Other books mentioned by Mrs. Hormel include "The Story of the American Revolution" by Robert H. Lowie, "The Story of the American Revolution" by George Stewart, and "The Story of the American Revolution" by George Stewart.
