

"Tea for Two"

By KATHRYN UMFREY

It was Birmingham's civic gear and community spirit that most impressed Mrs. Herman L. Shihler, wife of the new superintendent of schools, when she first arrived here several weeks ago. She particularly likes the business section where everything seems so compact and handy, she told me, explaining that in the suburban town where they lived formerly, there were a group of stores here and there and the municipal buildings in another spot.

Mrs. Shihler

Of course there are things that come as a surprise to a newcomer in every town—one of these in Birmingham for Mrs. Shihler was the hard water and the fact that so many of the streets here are without a curbing. Too, there is the Community House, which Mrs. Shihler put in so many of the smallish towns are talking about or just starting to do, and one so well established and effectively in use is a great pleasure.

Moving Is Natural
Coming from a big line of teachers, Mrs. Shihler takes moving as a natural event. One would never have thought that the slight woman, smartly turned out in a gray blazer, afternoon frock, who grew up in the home of her father, had been in the home for three weeks—their atmosphere was of the kind that some people spend years trying to attain. Mrs. Shihler's mother and father were both teachers.

in fact for a few years she went to school to her father. My sisters and my brothers all teach; I, myself, am a teacher, and as if that weren't enough," she laughed, "I married one."

Shortly after their marriage she and Dr. Shihler taught in the same school, Dr. Shihler being the superintendent and Mrs. Shihler the principal. In this capacity she taught everything from algebra to Latin, although her special field is literature. Incidentally, she still feels that time in school is much better spent on English than on Latin.

Fond of Reading
Being a literature major, it naturally follows that she should be very fond of reading, which, it developed, she said, "At one time," was a librarian, but since no library courses were offered at Ohio State, I turned to teaching."

Cornie, who is 15, and Marcia, 12, have taken on their mother's love of reading, although they are also very fond of swimming and out-of-door sports. "To get back to reading, Mrs. Shihler says that they have let the children read what they want, but trying to guide them as much as possible.

Although they have rarely forbidden any particular book, it was necessary at one time to insist that one of the girls stop reading so much!

The Shihlers met at Ohio State and were married before either of them had completed their college courses. The majority of their vacation time—one of the biggest lures for the teaching profession—has been spent in college towns where Dr. Shihler has been working on advanced degrees. In her spare time—as much spare time as a woman has with a house and two youngsters to look after—Mrs. Shihler helped her husband with research for his various papers and theses. Now that Dr. Shihler has his doctorate, the family hopes to devote more of its vacations to its main avocation—traveling. "They've done the East and South rather completely already and would like to make their next trip in the West."
