Magnolia branches and white spring flowers adorned the altar and white fans hovered in theatrical capella.

The tightly fitted, pointed bodice was fashioned with a sweetheart neckline and long tight sleeves with full ruffles from the shoulder to the elbow. The extremely full skirt and circular train were bordered with three ruffles. Her circular illusion veil was draped from a bouffant of points d'esprit.

She wore a seed pearl tussler, an heirloom in the Forsyth family, and carried a bouquet of carnations and freesia.

Joan Baker, the honor attendant, was groomed in white organza. The pointed bodice was distinguished by a sweetheart neckline and long sleeves finished with a double ruffle edged with white velvet border. Her hair was styled in a double bobbed with a double tulle, edged the tuffant skirt. She wore a cap of white illusion with a pompadour of blue combs and curls and a bouquet of carnations and pink gaul.

Bridesmaids were Betty Anne Pevay, Evelyn Prussing, Nancy Fisher and Albee Bradbeer, of Detroit. Mary Jeanne Forsyth was her sister's junior bridesmaid.

They wore gowns of white organza, fashioned like the honor mat's except that Mrs. Pevay's and the others' were three-quarter length. Their white pointed caps had round ruffles of pink sweet peas and they carried bouquets of pink sweet peas and pink ranunculi.
