

Lathrup Women Hear Mrs. Shain's World Affairs Talk

By LILLIAN DIEDERICH
Ruth Shain was guest speaker at Lathrup Women's Women's Club, last Monday afternoon.

Shain has conducted classes on International Relations in Birmingham during the past year. She referred to the past in order to present a picture of the future and what she holds for us. "No event seems important to us unless it shakes the world in which we are living," she said, "but things that have happened elsewhere in the world do directly involve us."

She said that we are not greatly moved because China is dying of war famine, disease and starvation. These facts trouble us but little, but a plane crash near at hand, which kills hundreds, as in the news of last year, had it all happened on Mars, would have meant nothing to us.

Leading Brain Things Nearer

Mrs. Shain continued, "The radius in our homes bringing commentators with brilliant news, and journalists writing of the horrors of war, have brought the plight of Finland and Sweden bodies buried in the snow, close to us. Several fights over the channel—Warsaw burned—London wharves burning—came as near to us as the distance to our time in radio."

She stated that we would not have had a third term President but for outside influence, and a third term would be the result of that which is now happening in the world would eventually effect it. "I have heard," she said, "and I do not say, too, have heard, the remark that Europe is again in another jam this time they can get along without us. When Poland was invaded France was on the verge of being attacked, when France was attacked, she was blamed for not stopping the invasion. When Germany struck the face of the oak called England, we realized that we had no choice but to fight. We did not protect the priceless treasure of Tudor England from being destroyed. We did not let high heaven, why allow this horror? and why have we failed to look at the part in which we have had a great stake and not realized it."

Mrs. Shain said that many Americans growl and hope for a negotiated peace, in much as to say that we want the countries doing the fighting and who presumably know what they are doing, to quit it all at our terms.

She continued, "There will be no negotiated peace terms except what terms best suit Mr. Hitler. Any deviation from war would have to be interpreted through him, to his people, as a surrender of the Allies. At Versailles, military ideas of Poch and George were harsh and realistic, but those old warriors knew the price of peace was a definite commitment to eat when that peace was violated. They realized peace had to be organized on a basis of force exercised in common and by just one nation. If present offers to negotiate amount of anything we must take our responsibility as the most powerful nation in the world and be sure that the thing we project on them has our backing."

"Since 1914, a great body of disillusioned people has been saying, 'We finished the last war, never again. We threw in our boys to be slaughtered that the country's riches might not be jeopardized. We have learned from bitter experience. We will never again help a warring nation.' It must be remembered neutrality is no assurance of peace. We rise to a person to denounce Germany. When Hitler sings his hymn of hate we scuffle and boil. Our thoughts are un-neutral.' We are not neutral

Birmingham Woman Physician Tells Why She Gave Up Her Practice

By NELLIE HURLEY MINIFIE

THERE is a definite need for women in the medical profession, Mrs. Robert H. Whitlatch, 707 Lakewood avenue, told me this week. A former practicing physician and an orthopedic specialist, Mrs. Whitlatch was speaking from experience.

There are many instances, and it all seems so sensible, when a woman doctor meets the profession, once the strength of men, is becoming increasingly popular for women.

Her uncle was a doctor. Mrs. Whitlatch told me. He was a bachelor and she being his favorite niece she spent a great deal of her time accompanying him on his trips.

She was laughing about it this week when she told me that this uncle was one of the new quickly vanishing band of family physicians. Vividly she remembers scrambling up in the sleigh, being tucked comfortably and securely under a warm lap robe and riding all over the countryside with him as he made his daily rounds.

Impressed by Horse
She was highly impressed, she told me, by being allowed to ride behind a horse. She was so impressed that she's not at all sure that the dream of someday being able to drive her own horse didn't induce her in choosing medicine as her own profession.

But most of all she loved her uncle's library, its high walls lined with impressive medical books and medical journals. She remembers that as a little girl it was the height of her ambition to be able some day to read and understand those books.

And so always, with this in mind, and not ever discouraged by her parents, she was graduated from Western Reserve University and from there went to the University of Michigan where she received her medical degree in 1925.

It was in Worcester, Mass., that she did her general internship at the Memorial Hospital and became interested in orthopedic work. And then she came back to face with the problem that somehow she must find every professional woman to continue in her chosen field to marry.

Mrs. Whitlatch chose marriage and came on from the East to Detroit to live. For a time she had a general practice in Detroit and later went into orthopedic work as a specialist. In addition to her own practice she worked for the Detroit Board of Health and also made orthopedic examinations in the schools. All of this in addition to lecturing at the old Detroit Teachers College.

Then Came Depression
About this time the entire country was in a depression. It was in Worcester, Mass., that she did her general internship at the Memorial Hospital and became interested in orthopedic work. And then she came back to face with the problem that somehow she must find every professional woman to continue in her chosen field to marry.

Visits with Birmingham and Bloomfield Hills Women

It was flourishing under what we call the depression. Every day there was little money and a real deal of unemployment. In the daily school examinations she remembered maintaining and maintaining a good standard of living. It was used to be possible to get a job in the business world, but it was not so now. It was used to be possible to get a job in the business world, but it was not so now.

It had a great effect on the quality of the American family, there is a consumer's daily struggle, a change in the way of life for the common people. The American Association of University Women is always interested in the quality of the American family, there is a consumer's daily struggle, a change in the way of life for the common people.

Then on top of this is the College Women's Voluntary Service which the American Association of University Women is strongly supporting. These volunteers, Mrs. Whitlatch told me, are interested in the fact that a national increase in school tax would be sought in Birmingham.

Details of military preparedness, she said, must be given to the public. There is another point of importance, she said, in the fact that a national increase in school tax would be sought in Birmingham.

ment: The strengthening of our democracy so that we may check the future against the nation. This cannot be achieved by government order alone, she continued. She calls for the efforts of intelligent citizens in every community.

And that is a paragraph, what Birmingham's A. A. U. W. is attempting to carry out, Mrs. Whitlatch said.

To the end of cultivating intelligent public opinion the local unit of the national organization of the public as well as its own members. It has an international character that is to be in its 10th year a class that since its beginning has been led by Mrs. Charles F. Shain. It has a child study group, a travel club and last had a vacation study class.

It has a group that studies child employment, wages and hours and what is expected of the American family, there is a consumer's daily struggle, a change in the way of life for the common people.
