

Official of City Issues First Call for Street Oiling

With blustery weather at hand, the man in charge, but James Barnes, of the City Engineering Department, has issued a first call for street oiling.

"Persons failing to have their oil tank cars repaired if they now getting their petitions and collecting the money," said. "It will help us much if we can apply it, for we like a carload at a time."

The cost is five cents per frontal foot each lot and such a job may cost $100.00. Street Oiling at four cents a lot is also possible if it is not guaranteed. Not less than one lot or any amount will do. In regard to the cost, it is up to the machines involved.

neighbors to persuade the owners to have their cars cleaned otherwise the city would not share the total cost for the street.

Where residents want a black-top guarantee for five years but not for longer, time also can be secured by petition. In such cases, assessment is spread and vacant lot owners must pay.

The project is approved by the City Commission after a hearing.

Parked At Curb, Two Cars Hit

The car of Oscar Peterson, 21, of North Woodward Avenue, was damaged Sunday evening when hit by a car driven by Quintin Chaney, 21 years old, of 150 Cole street. Also Peterson's car was hit by another car in the morning of the Marshal's plea with the text altered to read that France would sue for an "honorable peace" for an armistice that was negotiate to France.

This was the soft-spoken Sevareid, said, but one example of the complete chaos in France immediately following the German entry into France.

In Paris last Monday, he said, was everywhere, he said, after the French officers stationed near the Belgian frontier were recalled from leave—another sign that the French general staff was in complete confusion and hadn't the faintest idea of what was happening.

Fatherland, Sevareid maintained, the officers were unconcerned. They knew the fact that the Germans were never fighters, but that eventually France would submit to the encroaching troops as she had done in the past.

The confusion followed the government from Paris to Tours, where it was unable to locate even the remnants of a government that was scattered all over the city and its suburbs.

The chaos and confusion, Sevareid told his listeners, were utterly undesirable and the government's move from Tours to Bourges was so sudden that not only was the press uninformed of the change but many members of the diplomatic corps were not notified.

In Bourges, he said, there was still a lack of preparedness; there was authority nowhere, the economy was bawled down by a section of the government that was responsible.

That was the story he told of the downfall of one of Europe's first powers. A downfall so terrible, so devastating, so utterly unexpected that ruler and common man alike were unprepared to meet the emergency.

From the Women's Angle

By NELLIE HURLEY MINIFIE

Eric Sevareid, boyish, tall and angular manager of the Columbia company's Paris outfit during the French crisis, recently told a Detroit audience that old Marshal Petain's plan to make France a "safe harbor" was the most momentous error ever made in French history.

Petain's command, Sevareid said, was that the Marshall had the slightest notion that Germany would accept anything short of complete and utter capitulation.

The French press carried a full account of the speech, the morning of the Marshal's plea with the text altered to read that France would sue for an "honorable peace" for an armistice that was negotiate to France.

This was the soft-spoken Sevareid said,
