Local Government Needs Overhauling

ANN ARBOR — Simplification of Michigan's governmental structure by a reduction in the number of local units would lower the overhead costs of government, provide an opportunity for improvement in the administration of governmental services, and make the operations of the government more easily understood and more effectively controlled by the voters, according to Frank W. Landers, of the University of Michigan Bureau of Government, in a recent Bureau pamphlet, "Units of Government in Michigan."

"With the inevitable future increase in federal taxes, there will be a corresponding demand for reducing state and local costs," Landers points out. However, before attempting economies at the expense of necessary or desirable services, he says, consideration should be given to possible savings that might be achieved through an overhauling and modernization of the governmental structure.

Michigan, with some 8,294 units of government, has a greater than average number of units in comparison with other states, the study shows. Only Illinois, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, New York, and Wisconsin have more.

As of July 1, 1939, Michigan had 83 counties, 1,266 townships, 309 villages, 166 cities, 6,466 school districts, 8 port districts, and one metropolitan district, in addition to the state government.

The wasteful duplication that frequently results from such a large number of small, independent and overlapping units of government is one of the most obvious defects of the present situation, Landers says.

Standards for Employers, Employees Outlined by Detroit Committee

(Editor's note—As announced in last week's Eccentric, a committee in Birmingham is busy trying to arouse interest in bettering conditions in the field of household employees, and questionnaires are being distributed. The idea is that better working conditions will attract more competent workers, benefiting employer and employee. Following are standards approved by a representative committee of Detroit employers and employees, the Board of Education, Jewish Community Center, League of Catholic Women, the NYWA and the State Employment Service:)

What Is Working Time?

That time which an employee spends in the home either in actual work or on call. By actual working hours is meant the time spent in cooking, cleaning, washing, ironing, etc. By hours on call is meant the time during which an employee is required to care for children, to answer the doorbell or telephone, or hours when she is not free to leave the home.

The Working Day:

A full working day should not exceed 12 hours, with not more than eight hours spent in heavy work and not more than four hours on call.

Time Off:

At least one afternoon and evening during the week, beginning not later than 1:30 o'clock; and Sunday afternoon and evening, beginning not later than 2:30 o'clock. Wherever possible the employee should be given a rest period each afternoon and also at least one additional evening off.

An employee should be allowed at least one week's vacation with pay after a year's service.

Arrangements should be made allowing the employee to attend the church service of her choice each week.

Selecting the Employee:

Because of the varying needs of each household the employer should determine the most important requirements of her home and select the employee best qualified to meet those needs. No employee should be expected to do heavy work beyond her strength.

Trial Period:

The first week should be considered by employer and employee as a trial period.

Giving Notice:

A clean, comfortable, well-ventilated room which can be properly heated in winter should be provided. If the employee must share a room, some provision should be made for her privacy, such as a screen and a reading light. Clean linen and bedding are essential.

If a private bath is not provided, the employee should have frequent access to the family bath.

An employee should be permitted to receive guests on certain nights.

If no sitting room is provided, a room such as breakfast room, sun room, or recreation room should be designated.

Be alert and have a working knowledge of your job.

Be respectful of existing conditions and try to adjust yourself to them.

Be dependable at all times and show a sense of responsibility to your job even in the absence of your employer.

Feel that it is in the interest of your welfare, if your employer wishes to know the probable hour of your return.

It is courteous to introduce your friends to your employer.

Be considerate in your use of the telephone, radio, electric lights, and all electrical equipment.

Be neat and clean in your person, appearance and suitably dressed to do housework.

It is important for an employee to maintain good health.

The employee should avoid asking her employer to change her specified time of duty.

Suggestions to the Employer:

Discuss frankly the requirements of your household, and stress the most important duties.

Try to show an appreciation of the values of domestic work and encourage the employee in the development of her ability.

No routine duties accumulated during the employee's time off duty should be left for her to perform upon her return.

If uniforms are required they should be furnished by the employer.

The employer should avoid asking her employee to change her specified time of duty.

Be understanding and helpful in time of sickness or emergency.

Statistics show that most of the accidents happen in the home. For the protection of both employer and employee it is advisable that liability insurance be carried by the employer.

Says Exploitation Of Roadsides An Undesirable Trend

The effect of roadside commercialization upon property values as described in a report presented to the use of the Maryland State Legislative Council and the members of the State Legislature closely parallels conclusions reached by Federal Housing Administration land-planning officials.

Since exploitation of the roadside for commercial uses impairs traffic capacity, safety, and attractiveness of the highway and adversely affects land values in areas served by the highway, it is held obvious that motorists, taxpayers, and land owners should all be interested in preventing the heavy economic and human losses caused by such unrestricted use.

Studies of the effects of parkways and limited access highways are both essential to the adequate preservation of important main arteries accommodating heavy volumes of traffic. It was asserted, however, that other methods can give the same assurance of permanent freedom from numerous driveways, approaches, and encroachment from commercial exploitation.

Proof of progress in securing limited-access highways in at least two rapidly growing residential areas is evidenced by the fact that in California and in Long Island county have been adopted ordinances whereby direct access to county highways from private property is prohibited. Lots along highways either reject back to the highway and be provided with a heavy screen planting or front on a service roadway with exits at intersecting side streets only.

Solution Seen

The parkway and limited-access highway are both essential to the adequate preservation of important main arteries accommodating
