Detroit's Electric History Told

Birmingham Rotarians were told Monday noon the story of "How Electricity Came to Detroit" when William E. Edwards, of the Detroit Edison Co., addressed them at the Community House. He illustrated his talk with pictures of scenes and people of Detroit, taken as far back as 1874. Mr. Mathews was introduced by Rotarian Paul Grant.

Much credit for the development of electric and electrical equipment was given to Charles J. Vandepoel, a Belgian, whose experiments in the early days attracted the attention of Thomas A. Edison and Charles F. Brush, two inventive geniuses in the development of the electrical age. Detroit's first electrical street lighting, which are type, came in 1880, Mr. Mathews stated.

The present Detroit Edison Co. is the ultimate survivor of 30 and 40 companies that were merged to start and serve Detroit through its growth at the time was approximately 100,000.

March Night

Out in the depths of the strange winding its lonely way.

Along with the stars in the deathless dark.

Chanting a dismal lay.

Goes the wind.

Too sobbing, moaning, lonely, restless wind.

My life burns brightly, my lamp glows bright.

When the restless wind of the winter is in the air.

Keeps sobbing and shivering and howling and moaning.

And groning.

The strange March wind of the winter is in the air.

Of the lonely winter night.

From the Women's Angle

Just how dare Hank Kogener's text? That is the question which has been swirling since his deferment from duty in the threatened forced was recounted by a Florida doctor last week.

Particularly are Dr. O'Neil some already drafted, taking their views in a chorus of protest. They have been thinking to the baseball stars' draft board and pointing in persons in such numbers that this worthy body has found it well-nigh impossible to accomplish its regular work.

And they have not been doing papers, along with others interested in the matter, with letters wishing to know why Greenberg, last year's mascot, played in the major leagues, should receive special consideration.

These protesting ones, of course, forget that, as yet, the home-run king has not received special consideration, if ever he drops he has not yet been drafted. One doctor has recommended such deferment and it is likely that before final board, additional medical opinions will be sought. It is entirely possible that Hank's medical opinion is in such condition as to disqualify him for military service and if that is the case, medical reports claim infected teeth and a chronically aching back.

If it is hard, no doubt, to give up $50,000 or some such sum for a year's army pay as a backstop, but if others are making doing tossed to the winds an even higher salary, and others, not so fortunate in the matter of perhaps, have had their careers temporarily and accepted financial setbacks on a scale.

So far as Greenberg is concerned, judgment should be reserved until final disposition of his case is made by the authorities. He is physically unwell; but for one who is, he gets about with nice agility on the baseball field.

A Modern Solution to An Old Age Problem

THE PROBLEM is intestinal stasis or constipation for which almost 90% of the people in this country are afflicted to a lesser or a greater degree.

THE FAILURE of nearly twenty-eight out of every thirty men to pass a normal stool is the commonest cause of the nervousness, irritability, and loss of a very considerable number of persons in this country. The liver, the stomach and the kidneys are often out of the window.

THE LARGE INTERESTING known as the colon is a lever through which the indigestible parts of food pass out of the body; and it is there that we generally find the seat of the trouble.

THE SUBJECT of constipation is too extensive and too complex to be adequately treated here. However, we will treat the individual with those who are interested or wish to know more about the subject.

THE SOLUTION: Having made a study of this human ailment for many years, the conclusion that chronic constipation cannot be successfully treated by "braking or acting" mechanically. As a result the colon is treated as a peristaltic function.

THIS OFFICE treats such conditions structurally (by means of chiropractic treatment) and (except) dietetically, and hydrotherapeutically (by means of a colonic irrigation). The latter is a scientific approach to the treatment of chronic constipation and should not be confused with the "BRIBES" in the "NATURAL" use of purgatives.
