

Talk By Hindu Journalist to Close 20th Year of International Relations Class

Former Members Invited to Meet Tuesday Morning

Birmingham's International Relations Class ends its 20th year next Tuesday morning at the Community House when the program will be addressed by A. Ramani, a Hindu, brilliant Indian journalist now on an American tour to gather material for a series of articles for newspapers in India.

The class will meet at 10 a. m. and all present and former members of the class are invited to attend. There will be no breakfast this year.

Mrs. Charles J. Shain has been leader of the class for the entire 20 years, during which time there have been about 500 meetings, of which she has missed only two. Sponsors have been the University Women and the League of Women Voters.

These are biographical notes on Mr. Ramani: He comes of an old Hindu Brahmin family; educated for many years in England and London; lectured at the Bar but on leaving King's College, London, attached himself to the staff of Mahatma Gandhi during his stay in London at the invitation of the Round Table Conference. Throughout Gandhi's stay was constantly with him and worked with the Congress delegation; incidentally, persuaded Gandhi to
