

Gardeners' Corner

Doris T. Patten, Editor

The storing of bulbs and tubers, such as dahlias, carnas and gladioli, which must be lifted from the ground, is a problem with many gardeners whose homes have heated basements.

An unheated cellar with a dirt floor, which will keep apples and potatoes in good condition during the winter, will keep bulbs and tubers as well. There are three things to guard against in storing: excessive temperature, which will cause them to sprout; lack of humidity, which will dry them out; and lack of air, which will encourage mildew.

A temperature of 50 degrees or lower is ideal, but they will endure higher if the other factors are favorable. It is possible to keep them in a heated basement if they are protected by a covering of earth, sand or peat moss, which is occasionally moistened.

Most dahlia growers had found peat moss the most satisfactory covering. Tubers may be placed in bushel baskets or large boxes, filled with peat moss, placed in the coolest corner of the basement, and if a little water is sprinkled on the moss once a week, they will usually come through the winter in perfect condition. Dahlia tubers need not be cleaned, which is properly labeled. Dig out the tubers in the fall, shake off the dirt, and place them with bulbs adhering in the bag, without rinsing them off. In the spring the bulbs may be separated and planted in the same way with the large bulbs, thus keeping all of each variety together.

YELLOW KING HYACINTH

The bulbs of such variety separate the following is a good method for each variety: take a large paper bag of three-quart size, or a paper bag of the same size, and fill it with peat moss, place the bulbs in the bag, shake off the dirt, and place them with bulbs adhering in the bag, without rinsing them off. In the spring the bulbs may be separated and planted in the same way with the large bulbs, thus keeping all of each variety together.

When named varieties are grown and it is desired to keep them in good condition. The principal reasons of trouble with them are extreme humidity and poor ventilation. They should not be piled into a basket or box, nor enclosed in airtight bags which are open to the air. Mildew and bacterial rot are not produced by piling up, and the exclusion of air. Gladioli bulbs should be clean and the tops pulled off before storage. Do not remove the husk, which protects the bulb.

The Wife's side... The Husband's side

"I use the Gas Range! That's why I know about the instant high heat of Gas—the flexibility of the work-saving and time-saving features of a Modern Gas Range!"

"I pay the Bills! That's how I know about the economy of cooking with Gas—the dependability and freedom from repair that make Modern Gas Ranges so popular!"

GAS
THE NUMBER ONE FOR COOKING

CONSUMERS POWER CO.

Yes—you will agree that there's nothing like a Modern Gas Range for efficient, up-to-the-minute cooking performance and economy.

Truly automatic—Modern Gas Ranges provide click burners, oven heat control, automatic lighting, smokeless broiling and lots of storage space. If you want the most for your money, why not take your husband (or wife) today to see the New Gas Ranges now on display.

Dark, poorly lighted stairways are an invitation to accidents. A 100-watt bulb provides GOOD illumination at trifling expense. A standard light is usually turned on only a few minutes. If it averts only one bad fall, it repays its cost a hundred times over. The Detroit Edison Company.

Bits of Birmingham

Police arrested a leal man last week on a moral charge. He is charged with "ending his way," they found that he had been injured in an industrial mishap and needed medical attention, and arrangements were made for the wife, police working with the man's employer toward that end.
