ALUMINUM for the Nation's Air Defense

Because aluminum and various other metals are so vital to the nation's security, the Bell System has been busy finding ways to use less of them.

By substituting materials in telephone construction, 5,000,000 pounds of aluminum, zinc, magnesium and other metals have been saved this year. The saving in aluminum alone totals more than 1,700,000 pounds—enough to build 275 fighter planes. Just by using steel instead of aluminum in the little "finger wheel" on dial telephones, 65 tons of that metal are being made available, on an annual basis, for defense needs!

Still greater savings are foreseen. The search for new ways to conserve defense metals goes on steadily.

It is the objective of your Telephone Company to contribute every possible resource in meeting the challenge of the national emergency.
