

Garden Discussion Yields Suggestions For Large Group

An interested group of prospective Birmingham gardeners met at the Community House Tuesday evening to hear a discussion of Victory Gardening and its problems by three speakers, Mrs. Ruth Mosher, Place, garden editor of the Detroit News, Dr. James Tyson and Dr. Ray Hutson of Michigan State College.

Introductions were made by Mrs. William McCallum who explained what the conservation committee of the Birmingham Branch of the Women's National Farm and Garden Association is doing to aid Victory Gardening in Birmingham, mentioning the advisory board on gardening available to the public.

Mrs. Place spoke on Victory Gardening in general, that its purpose is serious and it differs from gardening in the past by an urgent need for persistence, real production and that the gardener must be well informed and build up a skill. She made the important point that people have a year to 18 months to experiment in gardening before there will be any shortage of food, and if the war continues the garden plot may mean the difference between a proper nutritious diet and not having things necessary to health.

Dr. Tyson spoke on the management of soil and fertilization of vegetable gardens. He said that attention and care all summer long would bring good results and suggested especially that too many things should not be planted in too small a place, remembering that tomato plants should be set out at least three or four feet apart.

Dr. Hutson spoke on insect control. He urged the importance of two things, plowing soil under as soon as possible to let it rot and leaving a good margin around the garden between plants and surrounding grass. He specifically mentioned that hand picking is the most efficient way of disposing of many insects and worms in the small garden, and using a poison bran bait in the garden before planting anything to prevent cut worms, and in the treatment for other insects.

Two hundred and twenty-five Birmingham people have taken the home fire prevention course, and the classes still go on.

Classes have been in progress for six weeks; each course consists of three meetings of two hours each, and certificates are given by the Civilian Defense Council to those who attend, and complete the safety requirements.

New classes are being formed, and next meeting will be held next week. One class will meet at the Community House Tuesday, April 7, at 10 a. m., and the other will meet Thursday evening, April 9, at 8 p. m. In addition, special arrangements can be made for teachers to instruct clubs or other groups which desire to take the course, which is simple and practical, designed to show the average householder how to prepare his home for emergency.

Further information can be secured by phoning the defense office, 1230, or by visiting it on the second floor of the Municipal Building.
