To the extent, then, that adults are not to be held responsible for the actions of their children, does the public educational system owe the public a duty to do so in its deeper obligation to society? Michigan's Constitution says that the purpose of the public schools is to "impart to the youth of this state the fundamental principles of civility, morality and knowledge being necessary to the good government of the state." The Michigan Department of Education says: "Religion, morality and knowledge being necessary to the good government of the state, the purpose of the public schools is to impart to the youth of this state the fundamental principles of civility, morality and knowledge being necessary to the good government of the state."
