

Proposes System For the New Reich

ANN ARBOR, Mich.—If the Allies are victorious, James K. Pollock, University of Michigan political science professor, has a realistic plan for a government to replace Hitler's that answers the question "what shall we do with Germany?"

The country should be supervised by an international government commission until it is able to erect a new constitutional structure that promises to be an improvement on the Weimer system, Professor Pollock says.

"It is a serious mistake to blame the political maladjustment of the years between the First and Second World Wars on the neglect of the economic problem in the peace settlement of 1919, he contends. It is equally wrong to assume that the economic problem is solved, the political problem will look after itself."

Pointing out that when the war is over Germany will not be able to continue at peace unless it is organized on a democratic basis, Professor Pollock blueprints his proposed plan, along democratic lines.

The next, German government, PECK'S Cash and Carry Suits, Topcoats, Plain Dresses $1.09 CLEANED and PRESSED For Service Phone 230 WOODWARD—NEAR MAPLE he says, should be federal and not unitary, and, if sound experience in the past has been followed, it should also be parliamentary and not presidential in form.

As basic requirements for a new German Parliament, Professor Pollock urges better methods of encouragement and promote genuine discussion and debate, and an effective upper house similar to the Reichstag, which would represent the states while acting as a stabilizer for the lower house. Members to this group, he adds, should be popularly elected in the states and should not be bureaucratic representatives of state governments as in the former Reichstag.

many commodities that are unknown prior to the first World War, then the consumer in retail establishments, and now threatened with partial or complete elimination, faces a choice for both the retailer and the consumer. Both groups will have to live in the face of a large, untidy, unpredictable situation, as part of the total war effort, said Mr. Ladd.

Takes Will Be Heavy

The problems of taxation as it will affect retail business was discussed by Ed Kurth, of the Wilson Drug Co. "It will be necessary for all of us to sacrifice to win this war," declared Mr. Kurth. "Payment must be made, so far as possible, through exercise and income taxes, supplemented by borrowing. High taxes tend to decrease post-war debt burdens, and also prevent inflation. Any other general federal sales tax and a general tax on payroll incomes amounting to ten per cent of the nation's annual incomes."

Rationing Is Equitable

"The plan of control of a nation's resources and, in time of war, is a necessary action," said Mr. Kurth, in presenting his phase of the discussion. "The plan is to ration the goods of the nation to all the people, at reasonable prices. It prevents hoarding by people who have plenty and protects the government itself in procuring what it needs to produce the material of defense. This war goes on until we all shall feel the pinch of rationing, as our standard of living is lowered, the United States must do in a short time what its enemies have planned for over a much longer period. With rationing, however, we may be consoled by the fact that our country is more self-sufficient than any other on earth, and whatever privations we may be called upon to suffer, yet we shall be better off materially than the rest of the world."

Curtailed of Buying?

"Should general buying be curtailed," the subject given by Paul Kurth, proprietor of Hoston's Hardware, proved an interesting one. Mr. Kurth suggested that in this war the retail merchant has the patriotic duty of educating the public to buy only what it needs, when it needs things, and not to hoard. "We merchants should be concerned in this matter by our knowledge of available commodities to sell, and our ability to get them. As items of various kinds vanish from our stocks, we must inform the buying public of this reason for their disappearance, emphasizing that the raw materials involved are being used by government in the war activities."

"Much of the recent buying has been caused by the public's fear of a shortage of many commodities, some of the fears being unfounded, of course. I consider it the retailer's job to see that his merchandise reaches the greatest number of consumers who need them. For we must remember that our job, as retailers, is to keep on doing business, but business-like basis, so that after the war we can proceed in the pattern of a peace-time economy. Go Without Some Items

Foster Toothaker, of Shain's Drugs, related that "business during the emergency gradually will find itself without many commodities to which it has been accustomed prior to the war. Many retail items are, of course, not completely necessities of life. Consumers must be taught to go without many non-essentials. The first quarter of 1942 retail business sales totals exceeded a similar period in 1941, although the volume of goods sold was less, due to war prices.

"I believe that our war efforts depend upon the tripod of the military forces, our industrial production, and the nation's retail establishments; in the United States we have 1,720,000 retailers, who constitute the country's purchasing agents; through our own personal enterprise we, as retailers, must do our part to keep business going, and thus help the general mobilization effort. We know that in England today, after several years of fighting, retail business goes on—not as much as before the war, of course. Even in a war a nation must produce commodities other than weapons of war, and

The increasing importance of old newspapers, magazines, books, cigar cartons, cardboard boxes, envelopes, letters and all other waste paper that the Salvage Committee of the Oakland County Defense Council asks people to save is shown by these facts:

Just one newspaper can make 36 pounder shell cups, and the average-sized popular magazine would make the interior components of two mines. Other bits of paper would make other military materials as follows:

Six old books would make one mortar shell carrier.

One soap powder canister would make four aerob engine gaskets.

Sixty large cigarette cartons would make one aerob engine shell carrier.

Twenty breakfast cereal cartons would make one case for three pounder shells.

Six old bills would make one washer for a shell.

Four assorted food cartons would make one box for aerob engine shells.

One old envelope would make one cartridge wad.

Twelve old letters would make one box for rifle cartridges.

Waxed paper and carbon paper are not wanted.

Miss Richardson

Pauline Richardson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Any persons interested in participating in this survey are urged to get in touch with Mrs. Brown, and any persons or organizations carrying on such activities are urged to let her know, it was said.

A group headed by Mrs. Angus McLean, 215 W. Washington, will conduct a weekly survey of local merchants and professional men, to obtain suggestions for consumer cooperation on deliveries, paper conservation, restricted and surplus goods, etc. All persons who are interested in participating in such a survey are urged to get in touch with Mrs. McLean.

The Consumer Mobilization Committee which is to be clearly understood, is not a part of the committee will be only those of a clearing house of information, and that it will not actually perform any consumer activity itself, but will support and back by educational efforts the activities of any person or group performing activities in the consumer field which are of general community good, and which contribute to the war effort. All organizations performing such activities are urged to use the Consumer Center for exhibits and distribution of information. All cooperation will be given them, Mrs. Grumond added.

The next meeting of the Consumer Mobilization Committee will be held Monday, April 12, at 10:30, at the new Consumer Center.

State College Buys A Pair of Mules

Latest of the additions to livestock for college classroom instruction, farm work and display to visitors at Michigan State College is a pair of two-year-old mules, bright sorrel in color with nearly nose and light mares and tails.

A shortage of good horses and the demands for extra was the reason in Michigan in 1942 may farm in the state, according to H. S. Hudson, superintendent of the college farm and horse department.
