Editors at Club Meeting Back Ruthven. Hit Closed Sessions of Board of Regents

Full-fledged support of Dr. Ruthven's program of wartime education at the University of Michigan, in the changes made by these institutions in the last year.

Coming on the trail of criticism by university regents concerning Dr. Ruthven's plan to discontinue the regular training agencies of the military department, the editors of the Michigan Press Association ...

It is another reminder that World War II is far different from the first conflict 25 years ago. And it brings up an interesting situation, the plight of higher education in almost modern war.

Dr. Ruthven then pointed out the recent trend of abandoning traditional courses in favor of technical courses as a result of "pressures set up in an industrial evaluation."

Dr. Ruthven, president of the University of Michigan, set forth his ideas on the function of higher education in war-time in a formal address to the newspaper editors at the occasion ...

“Any doubt as to the appreciation of the nature and consequences of the war by college and university professors and ...
