R. Atkinsons Give Outdoor Supper

A picnic supper was the scene of festivities in the backyard at the home of the Robert Atkinsons, of Shirley drive, Saturday night. The guests who were present were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Reicks, Mr. and Mrs. John Fauver, Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Bari, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Procter, and Mrs. W. S. Markle.

HOW ABOUT YOU? In a recent tin can pickup held in Lansing, it was estimated that nine out of every ten homes had a container of prepared tin cans out front. This, as it was intended, served as a tribute to men in the armed forces, on duty throughout the world. Lansingsites call a box of prepared tin cans a "badge of honor" for each home, and approximately 90 tons of tin cans, sent off to war, show what many such "badges of honor" can do to hasten the day of Victory.

Use Glue Solution for Walls There's a new trick in washing painted walls, say home economists extension specialists at Michigan State College. Try powdered glue solution, prepared as follows: A cup powdered glue dissolved in 3 cups of hot water. Add this solution to 3 quarts of tepid water and apply to walls with a cloth, working from bottom to the top. No rinsing is necessary. When the solution becomes dirty it should be discarded. The glue solution may be used also on tile or brick.

The Polish girl, attractive Olga Kirinski, whose country was ravaged and whose family was destroyed by the Nazis, was sympathetically portrayed by Donna Polyzinski. A sensitive restraint, here, in the capable hands of Pat Newhall emerged the handsome German girl, Erna Schmidt, whose brother Hans is in love with Olga. Hans was good as affected by Renwick Knox. Hans and Olga have one tender scene, early in the play, made poignant in the last act by the knowledge contained in a sampled letter to Erna from her mother in Germany that Hans sacrificed his life by deliberately crashing his plane into a near Poland rather than kill the people he loves and betray his ideals. Pat Newhall read the letter with great effect.

More Characters The character of Pat Renoir was well fashioned by Lois Burton, French accent and all. Marjorie Curwood, the English girl, played by Dianne Helgeson, functioned very understandingly. Inquisitive Sally Jackson, whose American Southern drawl was charming to hear, was played with gusto by Jeanne Helgeson.

The part of smart, energetic Bingo Hill, American ward of the Guaranty Trust, always on the alert to defend the underdog, handled by Barbara Brock, was expertly performed. Many a sound chuckle she evoked, too, with her wiles.

'Letters to Lucerne' a Fine Climax To Cranbrook Theatre School Season

A week ago, 'Letters to Lucerne,' a play by Fritz Rotter and Allen Vincent, was but a fond hope of the Cranbrook Summer School of the Theatre. Monday and Tuesday evenings were the prized realization.

For a look backward, in their anxiety to get rehearsals, the young thespians would not infrequently forget to carry their lunches. There were non-union hours of work. And after the use of extra precious "AT" gasoline to get lunches to them, they would distressingly only nibble on the food, so engrossed were they. The Directors would be found rushing to their meals, only to find they were in time for dessert.

Watching one early rehearsal was worth a long walk to teach the Greek Theatre at Cranbrook. The posturing, the ad libbing, the asides were the spice of the action. One young woman kept getting her two parts in the wrong lines and after a look of reproval but before the director could utter a word, "What am I doing?" would issue from her complaisant mouth. Near-hysterical laughter from all—and then a fresh start. But none of this in the final performances. Of course, one day the director is an ogre in the guise of a human, and the next (and in the end) the dearest friend and beloved mentor of the player.

Monday Night We caught a portion of Monday's performance and found it excellent. Naturally a good amount was expected from and given by such troupers as Ada Ward, Peggy Lind and Carl Womberger. Pat Newhall played with consummate skill the tense French girl, Jane Stacey and JoAnne Woods were chief laugh-getters. Bob Gage's characterizations, Mary Quinn, Jeanne Helgeson, Marjorie Curwood, Renwick Knox and Ted Strickland all contributed to a very fine production.

The young 'uns were a great surprise, as witness Tuesday evening's portrayals. Mrs. Caroline Hunter, directing the Cranbrook school for girls in Lucerne, Switzerland, was deftly and sincerely created by Mary McKinney. Martina's magnificent personification, on both evenings, was outstandingly done by Jeanne Helgeson.

The part of Gretchen Linder, a German National about to change her citizenship, and assistant to Mrs. Hunter, was very efficiently executed by Jane Stacey. Good enough. The Polish girl, attractive Olga Kirinski, whose country was ravaged and whose family was destroyed by the Nazis, was sympathetically portrayed by Donna Polyzinski. A sensitive restraint, here, in the capable hands of Pat Newhall emerged the handsome German girl, Erna Schmidt, whose brother Hans is in love with Olga. Hans was good as affected by Renwick Knox. Hans and Olga have one tender scene, early in the play, made poignant in the last act by the knowledge contained in a sampled letter to Erna from her mother in Germany that Hans sacrificed his life by deliberately crashing his plane into a near Poland rather than kill the people he loves and betray his ideals. police, left nothing to be desired. Mr. Womberger handled him with "know-how." Mechanics Good No less than an artist had a hand in the sets, music and beautiful lighting. The Greek Theatre at Cranbrook is the perfect setting for a play and the large audience luxuriated in its beauty. God did not grant the warmest of evenings but the bow of the theatre was cozy. The play was admirably performed and yes, the story has a moral. Little, selfish opinions are our incombustible enemy. If we would allow our hearts and minds to dwell not indifferently on personal struggles of peoples everywhere, we might learn to judge problems not just from our own close horizons but in a larger way. The spirit of the play cast a hopeful reflection. The tempo of the new world will bring great changes in the nature of life. How soon will we meet these changes, meet them honestly and unselfishly? The director, Carl Womberger, and his assistant, Annetta Womberger, labored sincerely for the perfection that both performances showed. Little Theatre groups in the east temptingly beckon to the Wombergers but they've chosen to work here and indeed have given generously of their talents. Thanks are due to them and to Mr. and Mrs. George G. Booth of Cranbrook, who faithfully make it their concern to witness the performance.
