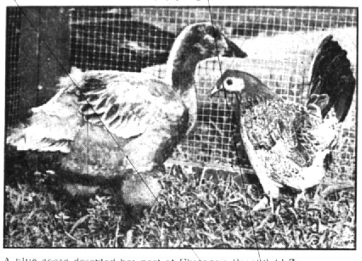
'Gooken'



A blue goose deserted her nest at Chicago's Brookfield Zoo, so curator Karl Plath drafted a bantam hen for nest duty. Banty sat and finally a gosling came forth, one of the few to be hatched in captivity. Here they are, the 11-inch, three-pound baby and the six-inch, one-pound mama.

Bleu and Roquefort cheese are somewhat similar in flavor but Bleu is made from cows' milk and Roquefort is made from sheep's milk.

NATIVES JOIN FIGHT

United States Army Air Forces officers have intensified a campaign to eradicate malaria in New Guinea.

The program was put into effect after medical reports showed that more Allied troops were admitted to hospitalization for malaria than for battle wounds in New Guinea area.

First move was to strike at the mosquito at his weakest point—in the incubation stage before the wings sprout and the proboscis is hardened to skin-puncturing toughness.

This called for hours of back-breaking drainage ditch-digging, oiling of swampy sloughs where the pest breeded, disposing of receptacles capable of storing stagnant water, oiling silt trenches, and scores of other such jobs.

Troopers could not be spared from the front lines for this work, so headquarters gave the Army Doctors the first priority on native labor for the malarial control program. There are now 1,400 New Guinea natives working on the project.

The never-failing bright boy knew the answer. "It's a lot of little holes tied together with string."

"What do fish eat?"

"What they can find."

"And if they can't find anything?"

"They eat something else."
