Even now, when operators are busier than ever before with vital war calls, more than a thousand hours are lost each day by unnecessary calls to "Information"—requests for numbers that are listed in the directory.

To help eliminate that waste of switchboard and operators' time, here are two things you can do—

1. Look up the number in the directory first. Call "Information" only when it is not listed.
2. If you must ask "Information" for a number, write it down in your personal directory so you will have it next time.

You can obtain your handy directory booklets—free—from any Michigan Bell business office, either by writing for them or calling in person.
