Fate Kept Regiment From Pacific Action

To the Editor:
I was a little surprised to see the 32nd Division mentioned in The Eccentric. But kinda proud at that, because it was part of that division until war broke out then they decided to take my regiment out of the 32nd and just leave it a triangular division instead of a square one. I still have my red armband insignia. Of course we can't wear it, but it brings back some memories. Some of my buddies I know in Camp Livingston have given their lives for their country, and we all should be proud of them. I know I am.
I just finished a month at a non-commissioned officer's school and had an average of 84.7 on all my tests we had there. We had classes in all of the weapons like machine gun, rifle, mortars, and Browning automatic rifle. Also, classes in everything that pertains to a rifle company. The last week was the hardest we had problems in the field and we were handicapped by rain; in that school they have done many day schedules. The last Wednesday we were there we went into the field at 1 in the afternoon and back at 9:30 that night and it rained all the time, so we were plenty wet. But it doesn't matter to get wet at it only goes skin deep.
PFC. WILLIAM TERRELL.
