To The Rescue!

For a year, the manufacture of telephones for civilian use has been virtually stopped by material shortages, and by the production of war communications equipment in the Bell System's Western Electric factories. As a result, thousands of people who need telephones would not have been able to get them — except for one fortunate fact.

Instead of iunking all the "uncight" fortunate fact.

Instead of junking all the "upright" telephones that were replaced by the cradle type, Michigan Bell kept some of them available for a possible emergency. Now those reserve telephones, all in good operating condition, are going back to work.

Service installations can be made, o course, only where there are adequatines and central office equipment.
