WHEN WILL THE WAR END?

Unofficial forecasters as to the date when the war is to end might be divided into two camps, the optimistic and the cautious.

the handling of our food products have feen so me what alarmed by the Itendency of many citizens to analysis accumulate supplies of various articles, particularly those which the citizens that may soon be rationed.

Hoarding will not do much good, for just soon as a commodity is put on the rationical list, each person is required to make an affidavit as to the supply on hand, and whatever that amount is, it is deducted from the quantity which the citizen will be allowed us buy under the rationing system.

Early experiments in the woluntary rationing of gasoline proved unsuccessful. The patriotic, cooperating citizen tried to obey the suggested restrictions on the use of gas, but the selfish, unthinking citizen paid no attention to, it. Voluntary rationing failed, and it ought to have failed because it put a penalty on the law-abiding, cooperative type of man or woman.

penalty on the law-abiding, cooperative type of man or woman.

The only kind of rationing system which should be put jute effect is a compulsory plan. Advance hoadding should be broken up by a strict inventors of each one's supplies, verified by spot checking, if necessary, and searching for any undue supplies concealed by greedy citizens. No patriotic man or woman will resent any decessary police activities to make our rationing of searce commodities fair and equal to everybody.

The coffee rationing, unfortunately, was been supplied to the composition of the commodities fair and equal to everybody.

The coffee rationing, unfortunately, was baunched in a rush, before proper steps had, been taken on prepared. Already there is a samped in soone sections to buy butter, and an or two other articles which some people think may soon be restricted. Of course, such advance buying makes the article searcer and brings about the inevitable rationing of it to prevent a continuance, and aggravation of the hoarding evil.

Any wise man in China ought to understand this fact.

In 1941, during conversations seeking a way to settle the peace of the Pacific, the Japanese repeatedly suggested that the great difficulty in the Far East was our aid to China. Nomura in the Far East was our aid to China. Nomura description of the China, there might be a basis for enduring peace.

In negotiations with Japan this country at no time considered the possibility of recognizing Japanese overlordship over China, even though there's as a general recognition that such a stand might lead to war with the Japanese.

GASOLINE RATIONING, plus the 35 mile speed limit, has done more to decrease accidents than all the safety campaigns ever staged. Which suggests, when this war is over, that a maximum speed law may continue to save lives on the nations highways.
