erent" come back, and some that I have plenty of combat marks on them—but we don't talk about that at all. Sometimes the anti-aircraft fire is as thick as a fog; we learn to maneuver and do acrobatics to get through. When we start on a bombing expedition we not only damage the essential target, but by our maneuvering we cause the enemy to maintain alerts at many points in his country—all of which makes him spread his defenses, using up his manpower and material resources.
