Could You Use A Bear-Skin Rug? Upper Peninsula Has 'Em On The Hoof.

If you crave a bear-skin rug for your living room floor, take a tip from this part of Michigan.

OH on the family market, and take tip-hitching, or mashing by part-team for the most northerly part of Michigan's Upper Peninsula—the slender, scenic wilderness peninsula with its wildness of mountains and greats all closer to the Arctic circle than the rest of Canada. Yes—that's a bear, noticed the campers had left. Later in the story they had a rug for their berries. This story was broadcast over the radio.

"Last summer a family arrived late in the day, just as you did. I told them also not to put food outside. 'We've camped all through Yellowstone Park,' replied the husband, so I assumed they were experienced campers. The next morning when I visited the park, I noticed the campers had left. Later in the story they had a rug for their berries. This story was broadcast over the radio.

When you finally reach Keweenaw, the noisy and playful black bears may greet you on the lonely streets of Copper Harbor. Make sure that the sports calendar is officially opened. Then instead of watching capricious bears push over garbage cans in a quest for food, or feed from the hopalong hands of Joseph Matthews, elderly proprietor of the Beavly View picnic store which is Copper Harbor's sole year-round establishment, just fire your tent and bag your bear. That is, of course, if you're not excited or too ashamed to shoot.

It's going to be "as easy as pie" to get a bear-skin rug, provided the county board of supervisors relents under a steady fire of letters, and the state game commission and the commercial resort owners, the season will be lifted soon in an affidavit.

Don't leave any food outside at night," Donald Dow warned us, "the first night we pitched a tent at the Fort Wilkins state park, right next to Fanny Hoo lake. The bears may be attracted to your tent by the food, and you will have trouble."

Dow is caretaker at the park, and he has two children at the Fort with his wife and two children. My wife, who was nicknamed "Toots" years ago because of her petite size, looked at me in dismay. I had had a gallant fight with John W. Rice, publisher of the Houghton Mining Gazette, and the Fort. Darkness was falling, and it was too late to retreat ignominiously. I tried to get out of there by force or otherwise. We were stuck.

Dow continued with more cheer. "A few days ago a mother and her two children were with me, and a bear while they were picking blackberries in the park, near Lake Superior. They ran into the lake to escape. Of course, the animal was hungry and wanted to eat."

found readily in the Keweenaw country, and in fact in many other parts of Michigan's northland.

They come nearly every except in the semi-tame bears get taken, when spoiled by human kindness and the miasma into the lake? We heard fresh berries.

Joseph Matthews, the Copper Harbor store proprietor, is fond of the critters. "Pal is my favorite bear," he explained. "He comes to my home nearly every except in the semi-tame bears get taken, when spoiled by human kindness and the miasma into the lake? We heard fresh berries.

In the front window of Mr. Matthews' emporium is a display of men's bathing suits with legs to the knees and buttoned shoulder straps. All kinds of chocolate bars were on display. Also, fresh loaves.

Harold Westcott, who runs the Matlock Lodge, Copper Harbor resort and postoffice, is inclined to favor the bears as a tourist attraction, but he gets mad when they ruin his apples and damage the orchard.

Mrs. Mortimer North, of Chicago, has been waiting in or near the civilized dominions of people, the animals were content to subsist on succulent roots and choice nuts and berries and fruits, all provided generously by a bountiful Creator.

J. H. Stephenson, assistant chief of the state park department's game division, said that rangers at Yellowstone Park in Chicago, was in Washington. His wife and two children were waiting for the production of tourists. The Keweenaw bears were first noticed in 1938 at the Keweenaw bear commission for the lodge and cabins at Copper Harbor. Tourists were delighted, and they sent many postal-cards to friends.

At the request of county superintendents, the state commission closed the Keweenaw bear season. Then, a policy of home rule was instituted.

The Keweenaw controversy is evenly divided. The pro-bear faction maintain that bears are valuable tourist attraction; no one has been hurt. The anti-bear group insist that bears are dangerous, a threat to nerves, and a nuisance. You can't argue with an excited mother that a bear wanted left-over food, not her innocent child.

And now for an anti-climax. Did bear invade our tent, or chase the miasma into the lake? We heard bear tales at every side, yet we saw our first bear, not in Keweenaw, but at Spikeshoer's place near Harrison. Spike, barefooted and bewhiskered as usual, was leading a black bear by a long steel chain. After the trip to Keweenaw, it was an awful lot, one by one.
