A CORRECTION

Two weeks ago we published a brief paragraph concerning motor accident which befell our Chief of Police John P. Hackett. It contained several errors of fact, which we seek to correct. Chief Hackett states that the accident took place early Sunday morning, August 8, not Sept. 2, as erroneously reported two weeks ago; that he had attended a dog show in Albion, not Caldwell; that he had driven his car only as far as Ypsilanti, where he joined a friend and with the friend in the latter's car went to Albion and returned to Ypsilanti, where he again got into his own car and drove to Birmingham. (Ed. Note: An Eccentric reporter did make an effort to Ypsilanti, where he joined a friend and with the friend in the latter's car went to Albion and returned to Ypsilanti, where he again got into his own car and drove to Birmingham.)

Wasps Since 1937 Save Peach Crop

An estimated 50,000 fragile wasplike insects released each year since 1937 are credited with halting the ravages of the Oriental fruit moth in Michigan peach orchards, according to Ray Hutson, head of the Michigan State College entomology department.

Great alarm was spread in 1928 when peach growers first found the fruit moth in the state. The moth is untoppable with sprays, as far as is known even today, yet peach production in the average year has doubled since the pest was first discovered.

The agricultural experiment station of the college began study of the pest in 1928 in an attempt to aid growers. A long series of different species of insects that attack the Oriental fruit moth larvae were shipped into the state in cooperation with the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

By 1937 it was evident the best of the parasite wasps, which bears no common name. The wasp is about an inch long, threadlike and fragile in size and shape. Before the Oriental fruit moth came into the United States with the

According to Professor Hutson, since the parasite wasp has gone to work in Michigan on the Oriental pest, it rarely attacks its previous enemy host, the strawberry roller.

Eastern laboratories under federal supervision increase the parasite wasps. The parasites are shipped by air express in small, ventilated moist cages, holding 200 parasites fed from a vial of sweetened water. Fru' growers release the wasps within 48 hours after the wasps are shipped.

Sure Pat and Mike were duck hunting.

Pat saw a wild duck far overhead and gave it both barrels. To his delight, he saw the bird fall to the ground. "Ye waxated that powder, Pat," said Mike. Pat turned to Mike and said: "Huh! I get the bird!" "Sure you did, Pat, but the fall would have killed him anyway."
