

Rev. Robert Woodroffe Urges Everyone Give to Blood Bank. Is Serving Country At Army Hospital Somewhere in Italy

In a recent letter to Harry Hoey, chairman of the Blood Donor Service for the Oakland County Chapter of the American Red Cross, the Rev. Robert W. Woodroffe, former assistant minister at Christ Church Cathedral, and now chaplain of the 9th Evacuation Hospital somewhere in Italy, wrote the following about blood plasma:

"I hope your work for the Blood Bank is continuing as well as it started. If anything, the need for plasma will increase. Imagine the final phase of the European war will be a pretty bloody business."

"Often, as I have seen a bottle of plasma dripping into a soldier in the operating or shock tent, I've wondered if it might be the only one to have come from one of my friends in Birmingham or Bloomfield. Helen Noble, Theodora V. Davis, Beth Cadigan, or yourself. I have watched to see if the patient took any of your characteristics, but he only blushed."

"We use a lot of blood plasma. It is a handy stuff and works miracles. During the Tunisian campaign we used approximately five hundred units. The place where it is used most is the battlefield and station where the wounded are first brought after being dragged off the field. Often it is impossible to get to the wounded during daylight. And, because of the extent of the battlefield in this war, the wounded are sometimes not found for many hours. When they are brought into the aid station they are given infusions and their wounds are superficially treated. Then they are sent back to us by ambulance."

"The ambulances travel in convoys for the sake of safety. The Germans, for the most part, have respected Allied medical installations and ambulances, but at the height that the bombers work and at the speed that the Messerschmitts strike, it would be impossible to identify a single ambulance mixed up with combat vehicles on the road."

"The American ambulance carries four litters. They are smooth jobs and, while conserving space they haven't the roughness of the British ambulance and do not allow for infusions on route. "When a convoy of ambulances reaches us, at any hour of the day or night, everyone who is not otherwise busy lends a hand in unloading them. It's rather a gruesome experience to open the door of an ambulance. I thought I'd get used to such things, but I haven't. First of all, you are aware of a lot of pain, even though the soldiers let you open a jeep. Then there are the torn uniforms and bloody bandages and splints. The smell is bad, too—a mixture of wet clothing, blood and dirt."

"We take those in shock to one of the tents where they are given plasma and other treatment to build them up for their operations. Those who are ready are handled by the surgeons as quickly as possible. In the most serious cases we give the patient whole blood donated by one of our own personnel or by another patient, but the supply of whole blood is limited."
