Mrs. George Marshall, of Goldengate drive, an artist who has exhibited her paintings in various cities and won several prizes, did an oil 18 by 24, which she donated to Women's Club to be sold to raise funds for the War effort which is uppermost in the minds of all club members. The scene is a winter landscape. The composition is well balanced and her technique is delightfully refreshing. Tickets will be sold through club members and the winner announced at the close of the season. The ways and means

Fish Sparring Open For Next Two Months

Lansing, Jan. 5.—The two-month 1944 season for sparring through the ice on inland waters which opened Jan. 1, will find, as in the 1943 season, many sportsmen living at a distance from fishing waters unable to indulge in this thrilling winter sport. Even with the opportunity to supplement food rations with fish, lack of gas for driving to fishing spots is expected to keep competition for shanty sites to a minimum.

Fishermen on inland waters expect trout streams and certain other waters closed to sparring may spear carp, suckers, mullet, redear, sheepshead, lake trout, smelt, northern pike, muskellunge, whitefish, ciscoes, platfish or Menominee whitefish, catfish, bullheads, dogfish and gar pike.

On the Great Lakes and their connecting waters herring, perch, pike-perch and shad may be taken

In addition to the species listed for inland waters, Muskellunge, however, may not be speared in the Great Lakes and neither muskellunge or whitefish may be speared in the connecting waters between Lakes Huron and Erie.

Sparring by artificial light is permitted only on Great Lakes waters and in St. Mary's river.

Beginning today, a new 1944 license is necessary for either boat and line fishing or spearfishing.

Bean and cabbage sprouts have little or no waste and are useful in stews, omelets, soups and salads or served as a separate dish with drawn butter or cream or cheese sauce.

By LINDO MOORE

Ever had to entertain a visiting foreigner? A wool man from Argentina, maybe, or an Englishman on a mission? Didn't you, sooner or later, plan a picnic in some country there? This in the good old days when the only thing you needed for a gallon of gas was 18 cents?

And didn't the visiting fireman, sure as fate, start asking questions about your so-called "putting up the side"? What is that flowering bush? Are these berries good to eat? In my country there is a plant like this that kills the lambs' and goat's spring—how is it there?

And so on. If you're like so many of us, you hang your head in a mumble that you don't know. Except for poison ivy (and you know about that) from experience, you are ashamed to find that you don't know any more about the plants in your own dooryard than if they were growing on the moon.

Afterwards, you hunt up a botany book and leaf through its pages. The few pictures are queer, the names are long, and when you see that formidable Key, you give up in despair. Thinking wistfully that it would be nice if some kind person would make a plant book about the plants in your own territory, you give up the whole thing as a bad job.

There is such a book, please! Just off the press, Shrubs of Michigan was written by Cecil Billington and published by the Cranbrook Institute of Science this month.

This is a botany book for the rank amateur who ever walked across a woodlot and wondered if those fat berries were good to eat.

It is more than a botanist's study of shrubs, though professional botanists will doubtless find much of interest in it. It is clearly written, scholarly, but mercifully lacking in the fog of complicated terminology that so often frightens off the amateur in the original sense of the word who has managed to instill his own great enthusiasm for the plant world into his writing.

One of the most helpful sections is one illustrating common botanical terms. Seen pictured, even such names as "campanulate," "obovately serrate" and "trifoliate" lose their terrors and become merely useful words like "carburator" or "skillet."

The botanical key, another burden for the amateur, is robbed of its mystery also. The author, explaining its purpose and function, makes it clear that it is a tool, not a deliberate attempt at baffling the public. It would seem that once having learned the meaning of the key, the use of the key in identifying a specimen plant should prove as fascinating as any wondrous game.

The main body of the book is arranged in the form of a line through the forest and grove in woodlot and pasture land over the state. There is a description of each, with its name, habits and locale. Included are small maps of the state indicating distribution.

The large number of illustrations is a particular joy—especially should you be one of those willing to admit that most of us learn more from one picture than from a dozen pages of text.

Altogether, this is a useful, scholarly book that will yet find itself in libraries and the fireman's baskets this summer. Which is a good recommendation of any book. It is available at the Baldwin Public Library.

The little country girl went shopping in the big city with her nose and had her first ride in an elevator.
"Did you enjoy it," asked her father?
"Yes, but it was so funny, Dad!" answered the child. "When we went into the little house, the upstairs came down!"
