The plot concerns an eccentric millionaire (George Brosch) who invests his money in a musical comedy he thinks is sure to fail, therefore saving him some income tax. However, a young song writer (Edward Tulliver) and his confederate (Jim Bullock) want the play to succeed. William Martin plays the part of the bewildered producer who never quite understands what's coming off. George Wilkins plays the eccentric millionaire, and Rolfe Spinning, as Western Union messenger, contribute a surprising ending.

Royal Oak threatened during the last few minutes but careful ball handling by the Barnum players stopped the threat. (Use the Eccentric Want Ads)

HELP KEEP THE DOCTOR HEALTHY VISIT HIM BEFORE HE MUST VISIT YOU
The doctor is only human. He, too, is subject to the dangers of over-fatigue and today, he is trying to care for a wartime practice that has doubled and tripled. If he were laid up, there would be less doctor to serve the community. Be considerate of his health by being considerate of his time. Call him to your home only when absolutely necessary, and then, if possible, call him early in the morning so that he can plan his calls with the minimum use of time and energy.
