SAVING SUGAR IN CANNING

Honey and corn syrup can make the sugar go farther this season for home canning. Jean Allen, home economist of the Kroger Food Foundation, explains.

With sugar rationing limiting civilian canning allowance to 15 pounds per person and 120 pounds per family, many housewives who expect to can again in large quantity will welcome suggestions to "stretch" the sugar. Tests conducted at the Kroger Food Foundation show that honey and light corn syrup are acceptable substitutes for canning peaches, apples and pears when used to replace part of the sugar.

Since honey is as sweet as sugar and does impart some honey flavor to fruit, it is best used to replace up to half the sugar, Jean Allen advises. Milder flavored honeys are preferred.

Corn syrup is only about half as sweet, but replacing one-third the usual sugar allowance with light syrup is recommended for peaches, apples and pears. Firm fruit results if corn syrup alone is used, and unless this is objectionable to some taste, all light corn syrups can be used, preferably in a thin syrup. Dark corn syrup alone is not recommended, but it can be used in small part with sugar, especially with darker fruits, like plums and berries.

Saccharine and sorghum are not recommended by Miss Allen for home canning.

Finally, if the housewife wishes to can peaches, which are now in abundance on the market, and still has little or no sugar, the can "put up" her fruit without any sugar or the very light sugar syrup, Miss Allen points out. Heating and sealing preserve the fruit, and sugar is simply a sweetener, she explains.
