INTERPRETING THE NEWS

By GENE ALLEMAN

Detroit—This Michigan metropolis of more than 1,500,000 inhabitants is still the world's automobile center and is still having labor troubles.

A vocal minority in the newly-organized automobile industry is chiefly responsible for the current plague of strikes. Oddly enough, the labor conflict is occurring just at a time when labor leaders are selling the loudest at Washington about the rise of unemployment during reconversion and the resultant need of more unemployment compensation for jobless workers.

Governor Kelly is asked to call a special session of the state legislature. Michigan unemployment benefits, among the highest in the world, would be boosted to $30 per week.

Dynamic Detroit astounded the world with its output of munitions. Perhaps it is inevitable that labor should try to hold onto its wartime boom earnings.

Overtime beyond the 40-hour plus double time for 40 days and holidays, fattened the Detroit war workers' purses to a level unknown in peacetime.

The sight of Negro workers flocking into ritzy Detroit style shops and paying inflated prices for every-day garments was commonplace here during the war. In contrast, more workers to fulfill bumper government contracts; manufacturers welcomed the arrival of Negroes and whites from the Middle South and the Deep South. An abundance of labor shops and paying inflated prices for every-day garments was commonplace here during the war.

Washington's demands for more military tanks, more and more of everything else essential to victory.

Now that the war is over, and with it the bonanza of overtime earnings has come to an end, labor is fighting to retain its recently won benefits. Workers are resisting inevitable adjustment to peace-time production.

The viewpoint of management in the September strikes is expressed by Henry Ford II, executive vice-president of the Ford Motor company. He said recently: "They talk about 66,000,000 jobs. How can there be that many jobs when our workers quit to go home?"

Proper Storage of Summer Equipment

Remove Rust Wax Porch Chairs Oil Garden Tools

Use bottles of turpentine and household oil to clean rust from small garden tools before putting them away.

By PEGGY MASON

When screens and awnings come down, and the weather turns cooler, it's time to put away summer household and sports equipment for the winter months.

A little extra care taken now will help prevent deterioration of these items during the winter. And come next spring, everything will be in readiness for a new season.

Rust is the enemy of garden tools and should not be allowed to remain on them over the winter. It is easier to clean them up now than to wait until you are ready to use them again. Your bottles of turpentine and household oil will clean rust from small garden tools before putting them away.

Protective coating of bottled liquid wax will keep outdoor furniture in good condition for next year.

Garden equipment with moving parts, such as lawn mower, should be oiled before putting away for the winter.

Great care should be taken in the storage of sports equipment, much of which may represent a considerable investment. Fishing rods, canoe paddles, tennis rackets and other summer sports items should have a storage place all their own. Never hide them away in the back of a closet where they may be damaged. The ideal storage arrangement is a shallow closet where each piece may be hung in a clamp bracket or with straps.

After the summer vacation, give each piece of the family's luggage a protective coating of wax. In addition, each bag should be covered with a cloth to keep dust away.

Update at Cassopolis, the county-seat of Cass county, is a country newspaper editor who recently observed his 57th anniversary of service to his community.

William H. Berkeley is his name. "Bill," as he is called by everyone, possesses typical Yankee traits of old-fashioned manly, can-do integrity. When he writes an editorial, he calls 'em just as he sees 'em. Recalling Mr. Thomas' demand for the $100 war workers' bonus, Editor Berkeley presented the following comment in his newspaper:

"These labor leaders (C.I.O.) say that the war workers did a 'superlative' job of turning out war equipment and therefore are entitled to a bonus of $1,000 each, and that the money could be paid from the unexpended balance of funds that were appropriated for war with Japan."

"Let's examine this a bit. Every one of those war workers received extra pay during the war effort, with time and one-half for overtime and double pay for Sundays and holidays; and, while we hate to say it, the whole country was full of stories of wasted time in the war plants."

"But, granting that every one of them did a full and honest day's work every day, what claim have they against the millions of soldiers and sailors who fought and suffered on the firing lines, or on the ships, or in the air? These people who stayed at home, worked in warm factories on comfortable jobs and enjoyed the comforts of home were made better off financially by the war. The people of America will not stand for their looting the public treasuries now that the war is over."

To which a lot of weary Michigan taxpayers, just as patriotic as any ex-war worker, will add fervent "Amen!"

The road to federal subsidies is also the road to state capitalism and its inevitable consequence: Totalitarian government.
