Michigan Mirror
INTERESTING THE NEWS

By Gene Alleman

In his new crusade to make state commissions and boards more responsive to the voters, Governor Kim Sigler is again in the role of a bold reformer, a knight in shining armor, astride a traditional white horse, giving battle gallantly to the forces of entrenched vested interests—this time, state bureaucracy itself!

Here is an issue obviously cut out for Michigan's fighting governor. There is little doubt that he will try to make the most of the opportunity during 1948, an election year.

The governor's announcement that he will seek to make directors of commissions and boards responsible to him, and in turn dependent on the State Senate for appointment, was made in the triumphant wake of a successful legislative session. There the governor displayed new and aggressive powers. No longer was he content to submit his recommendations and then leave senators to their own prerogatives, thus keeping the executive branch separate from the legislative branch, as he has done earlier in the year.

With the aid of state G.O.P. chieftains, he applied the pressure convincingly and effectively. A 32-page bill abolishing the corrections commission and replacing it with a non-civil service appointee, was considered briefly by the Senate Judiciary committee, sent without change to the floor, explained for six minutes and approved 25 minutes later. That is speed!

Observers have pointed out that the present position of the governor is a reversal of his earlier stand regarding the commission. Last May he indicated that the corrections commission was one of the best in the land. He asked Austin H. MacCormick, executive director of the Osborne Association and a noted penologist, to appear before a legislative committee that was considering a bill to revise the Michigan setup. MacCormick declared that Michigan's system was a model.

With his November bill approved overwhelmingly by the legislature, Sigler then disclosed that he would ask the legislature to vest power in the governor to appoint commission directors, subject to Senate approval.

The governor feels that Michigan has too many commissions and boards. Some should be abolished outright; some should be retained. Those worth retaining should be held responsible direct to the governor who now, Sigler says, is little else than a "clerkified clerk."

He specifically refers to the state conservation department as being a kingdom unto itself, free from political control. Whereas the director now holds office at the will of the commission, under the Sigler plan he could be reappointed or fired every two years at a turn of the political tide.

Therein lies the great weakness in the governor's armor. For the past 18 years only one Michigan governor—Harry F. Kelly—has served two consecutive terms. Every two years, with one exception, a new governor took office. In the department of agriculture the result was a new director every two years with appalling regularity. This lack of continuity prompted the legislature, spurred by farm organizations to take the directorship out of politics and into the hands of a new commission and school.

Dr. A. E. Quarton Opens Office

Dr. Albert E. Quarton, who returned from military duty last January, announces the recent opening on Nov. 1, of his offices for the practice of internal medicine. The new offices will be located in his home at 1083 East Maple road.

Dr. Quarton was born in Birmingham in 1913 and attended local schools, as well as secondary schools in Pontiac and Ann Arbor. He was graduated in 1938 from the University of Michigan Medical school.
