TELEVISION COMES TO TOWN

A new art-and a new industry-has just been introduced to Detroit. Television has come to town. The curtain is up on a new era of enter-tainment and education for Detroiters.

Starting this week, The Detroit News, through its new television station WWJ-TV, will broad-cast regularly scheduled commercial television . bringing news and comedy, speeches and sports, right into Detroiters' living rooms.

Thanks to this progressiveness, Detroit will be the first telecasting center with regular programs between Chicago and the East. This week, these shows will be received by some 1,500 sets; by year's end an estimated 10,000 receivers will be in daily use in and around Detroit.

While, at present, programs will be produced locally, eventually television will bring, right to your easy chair, a presidential speech from Washington, a football classic from Pasadena, or an opera from the Metropolitan. It will bring you history-as-it-is-made... with that incomparable on-the-spot feeling.

The Detroit Edison Company always has pioneered in developing new uses for electricity. It is natural that it should do its share in welcoming television to this community as a part of helping its customers get the most from all the electricity they buy.

Today, Edison's work in relevision is concerned chiefly with gathering, evaluating and coordinating information that will eventually be of practical use to Edison customers. Its engineers, for example, are currently studying the various types of receiving antennas best suited to local conditions. As the industry advances, The Derroit Edison Company expects to become increasingly helpful in the progress of television.
