Many Important Historic Places Within Easy Reach of Michigan Vacationists

By The Old AAA Traveler

School teachers are great travelers, usually traveling into those places where they find the historical, hence Pennsylvania and New England are among the favored objectives. Michigan teachers are especially fortunate in that they are within easy driving range of those areas.

With vacation nearing, you may there again history, for it was on the fields of Gettysburg that the most important battle of the Civil War was fought, a battle in which the Union might easily have lost the struggle but for the aided patriotic impetus which came with the morning of July 4, 1863.

At Gettysburg, Lincoln delivered his immortal address, the spot which stands the old State House with the British lion and unicorn still on its facade. Old North Church, from the tower of which the signal lanterns flashed to start Paul Revere on his immortal ride. Bunker, Hill Common, the oldest public park in the country.

All Very Interesting

Historical highlights by the hundreds all over Boston—the old cemeteries in which sleep the great of that bygone day—Faneuil Hall, frequently called "Cradle of Liberty" and the Paul Revere House in which Revere fashioned his silver and copper in a d. w. o. k.—Old Ironsides moored in the Navy Yard and, just across the Charles River, Harvard and almost equally famous Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

All of New England is interesting—Connecticut, and Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Maine and an early summer tour of the area is an unforgettable experience.

Don't for a moment think that other areas do not carry high historical interest, for there is Washington itself and magnificent old Richmond, the bleak point in Virginia where the first whites stepped to shore, and, of course, the New York territory, with its patriotic shrines, its glorious Manuville Trail and its greatest metropolis in the world.

Yes, Michigan teachers are extremely fortunate in having this rich, hunting ground right at their fingertips.

Crocheted buttons, encrusted with multicolor pastel beads, fasten on a new jacket suit of pink Irish linen featured in the Fred A. Block collection.

Probably America's most precious object is the Liberty Bell, one of the "relics" when Michiganders visit Philadelphia, as thousands will do this Spring and on into the Fall months.

bank on literally hundreds of where he stood now marked by Michigan teachers taking to the Open Road, heading into the sections where they will see, face to face, the specific things they've been reading about and teaching to their classes through the years.

Pennsylvania, of course, is rich hunting ground for the student, for it might properly be called just about the birthplace of today's United States.

1st Settlement in 1643

The state goes back to 1609, when Henry Hudson anchored in Delaware Bay and laid claim to the territory. The first settlement was made by the whites in 1643, and in 1681 William Penn obtained a grant and became the actual builder of the Keystone State.

Grand old Philadelphia saw much of history written, and there it was that the Declaration of Independence was signed. Today the visitor sees the desk and chair which was used in the signing of that momentous document, just as the visitor sees the hallowed Liberty Bell which proclaimed freedom throughout the land.

Then Valley Forge, where Washington spent that dark winter of 1777-78, that winter when his men actually left trails of blood in the snow because they had no shoes. You see Washington's headquarters and you see the replica of one of the crude little huts in which Washington's men lived.
