persons entitled to an exemption would not pay the tax after the 1945 statute was enacted and therefore no provision was made for refunding the exemption to those who erroneously paid it after 1945. The result has been that those who were entitled to the exemption in 1945 and years thereafter who were unaware of the exemption and paid their tax can not secure a refund."
Such a result was obviously not intended by the legislators and the proposed change as drafted by Beier would make it possible for veterans to secure a refund if they paid taxes which they were actually exempted from paying, regardless of the year paid, he said.
BVO intends to enlist the aid of other veterans' organizations and the joint veterans' committee of the state has been asked to place a resolution before Governor Sigler requesting that the amendment be placed on the call to Michigan Legislators for the January session.

Maples Journey to Highland Park for Game Tonight

By Bill Robertson
Two evenly matched teams will clash tonight when Birmingham meets Highland Park at Hackett Field in Detroit.
Although the Polar Bears' season record is not too good, it must be remembered that they have been playing the best teams in this section. They defeated Catholic Central 14-0 and Hazel Park 32-0. They were turned back by Wyandotte 24-0, Fordson 13-0, and Monroe 26-7. A 7-7 tie with Grosse Pointe finishes their season to date.
Highland Park will outweigh the Maples in the line by close to ten pounds per man. Francoeur and Zandy, two experienced tacklers, will anchor the Polar Bear forward wall. Hortinjan, a hard charging fullback, is the mainstay of their backfield.
Operating from the single wing and T formations, Highland Park so far this season has shown ability to throw the ball around successfully.
Last year on a slippery field the Maples and Parkers played to a scoreless tie.
Fans wishing to attend the game may go south on Third to Pitkin to Hackett Field.

work for little to gain much because they demand the latter first."
Need for Patriotism
He also urged that parents instill a deep sense of patriotism in their children.
"Bring home to them how lucky they are to be Americans, and teach them that it is something to be proud of, to be cheerful. When your boy or girl speaks of taking some position with the Federal Government, do not discourage him because it is not an important position. Praise him and give him every bit of help that you can. This way, and this way only, can we successfully hold America's proud place."
Among the examples he gave was one of a union group. One of its members went home discouraged, and told his wife the Reds were running the nation. "How many are there?" she asked, and he replied "Three." Somewhat amazed, she asked him simply why he, and two friends, did not go out and match their influence against these men. While not sure that it would work, the man tried it, and before long he and his friends won the complete backing of their particular group.

LANSING, Nov. 6.—The department of conservation and the state police are cooperating in this fall to greatly expand a messenger service for deer hunters.
For several years the conservation department and the state police have invited hunters to register at their field headquarters and post, giving their home addresses and the location of their hunting camps. This enables the state police and conservation officers to reach them in case of emergency at home.
This year the two state departments are cooperating to make the service even more efficient and convenient. Hunters may notify their families and the place where they work as to the particular conservation or state police station where they will register the one nearest their hunting camp.
Then should an emergency arise, the family or working place can be notified by telephone to the nearest police post or conservation headquarters. That station will radio the message to the station where the hunter is registered and the message will be delivered in person.
In the same manner, should something happen to the hunter, the state police or conservation officers can notify the family or place of employment.
A supply of registration cards is being distributed to the various stations this week. Fifty registrations will be available for registering.
