

3rd LIFE Exhibit at Cranbrook Until October 31

"Venice," a photographic exhibition prepared by the editors of LIFE is now being shown at Cranbrook School. The exhibit will continue through October 31. The exhibition is an expansion of the article, "Renaissance Venice," and is the third to be based on the LIFE articles dealing with the history of Western culture.

For a thousand years Venice has been the wonder of travellers. In 1365 the poet, Petrarch, wrote, "I know not if it has an equal within the bounds of the world." This exhibition in both text and pictures, suggests the Renaissance splendor and opulence and rich commercialism—in fact the whole extraordinary achievement of art and life in that unique and serene city.

The exhibition opens with a panoramic view of Venice in 1500 as imagined from the air by a Renaissance artist, with the Grand Canal winding like a serpent through the heart of the city.

A Charmed Life

The twenty-four enlarged panels then follow with the story of the fabulous sea-girl city which enjoyed a charmed life. With her government and populace alike there was but one faction: Venice; one loyalty: Venice; one love: Venice.

The pictorial material is organized under four categories: government, religion, art and literature, civic and private architecture. Included are the color reproductions which appeared in LIFE of the paintings by Titian, Veronese, Giorgione and Carpaccio; also photographs of St. Mark's, the Doge's Palace, the Sanovino Library, Palladio's Church of San Giorgio Maggiore, and portraits of Vittoria, Sansovino, Titian, Aretino, Tintoretto, an Aldus title page, views of various private palaces, the Rialto, the Colonna, the Grand Canal, etc.

Shell of Former Self

After the discovery of America, and new trade routes to the Orient were opened in the 16th century, Venice was doomed. That she without her enemies in war and trade from 697 to 1797 is testimony to her great strength.

But by the mid-eighteenth century Venice was a shell of her former self. The masks worn at her brilliant carnivals seemed to symbolize her false position. Then in 1797 a handful of Napoleon's troops put an end to the once proud state.

The exhibition was prepared under the direction of John Goldsmith Phillips, Associate Curator of Renaissance and Modern Art, Metropolitan Museum of Art. The textual commentary, also by Mr. Phillips, quotes freely from various 15th and 16th century writers and describes the Republic of Venice at the height of its power. Something to Sell? The Right Way to Feed the Crown Dog (Part 3)

I believe that every good kennel would find an accurate and easily worked scale to be of the greatest benefit. Of course, it would have to be more than an ornament in the trophy room. Weight is in direct proportion to the health of the animal. Loss of gain from the normal is a sure indication of improper feeding. If it is certain that the feeding is correct, the variation in weight will indicate the breaking down of some one or more of the body functions.

The dog is a carnivorous animal. This statement applies equally to the Chihuahua and the Great Dane. It also applies equally to working dogs and lap dogs. Meat, or some substitute such as fish, should be given to the dog every day. Fresh raw beef is the most easily digestible form in which the food may be given. Following this are cooked beef, mutton and lamb.

Boil or Broil

It is preferable to boil or broil meat for dogs. If boiled, it should be kept in the water only long enough to cook the meat and not long enough to extract all the nourishing soluble parts and leave the more or less indigestible fibre. Meat should be seasoned slightly with salt. It should not be briny.

In feeding dogs, it is not necessary to select the expensive cuts. If meat is not strictly fresh, it may be fed to dogs without harm. The whole dog family is protected from danger of ptomaine poisoning by a peculiar idiosyncrasy. In fact, it is safe to feed a culture of ptomaine bacteria to a dog without causing any disturbance. For aesthetic reasons, if for no other, it is better to use good fresh meat when it is obtainable.

Horse flesh is used frequently as a basis of diet in large kennels of hounds and other large breeds. It appears to digest easily and is nourishing. In large kennels, it is the custom to purchase horses on the hoof and to slaughter them. Lame and old horses are used. The flesh of diseased or extremely emaciated animals should never be fed to dogs.

Can Use Canned Meat

At times it is difficult to obtain fresh meat. When such a condition is faced, the problem may be solved by using canned meat. The large packing companies put up roast beef in cans of large size. There is also a canned food which is specially prepared for the diet of the dog. Dogs appear to like it and it is nourishing.

Fish is an excellent substitute for meat. I prefer the coarser, less oily fish, such as cod or halibut. Fish should be boiled in preparation for the dog. Canned salmon or tuna fish may be substituted for the fresh fish.

In an emergency, eggs may be used in place of meat. They are used either raw, soft boiled, poached or coddled.

Don't Fry Dog Food

As a general rule, it is not wise to fry food for the dog. Fried food causes a gastric disturbance with vomiting. This may not appear when fried food is first given. Later on the feeding of fried food will cause indigestion.

The average shepherd dog requires about a pound of meat a day. Large specimens may be given as much as a pound and a half. Smaller dogs require a little less. The average Pekinese should receive three to four ounces a day. Airdales and Doberman pinschers may be given three-quarters of a pound, and fox terriers about half a pound. These weights are given as a guide to the correct amount of meat to be given, and may be changed to meet varying conditions of appetite, digestion and climate.

"One Deer" for Archers in 18 Counties

Act No. 326 of the 1947 session of the Legislature, effective October 11, permits archers to take a buck, doe or fawn October 11-November 5 this year in Alpena, Benzie, Crawford, Gogebic, Ionia, Iosco, Iron, Leelanau, Luce, Mackinac, Montcalm, Montmorency, Newaygo, Ontonagon, Osceola, Roscommon and Schoolcraft counties. Archers have been permitted to take a buck, doe or fawn in Allegan county since 1941. October 1-November 5 archers may take bucks with three-inch antlers in any county of the state.

Southward extension of the boundary of the territory open to hunting for bucks with firearms opens an additional 3,900 square miles, including areas of crop damage by deer. The regular gun hunting season is November 15-30.

Applications for gun hunting of antlerless deer December 1-10 in part of Allegan county are accepted by the conservation department's game division at Lansing through October 5, and 500 will be chosen from among the applicants by lot.

In most northern counties one bear per hunter may be taken during deer season, but in some counties where bear are not protected there is no closed season or bag limit. Conservation officers will advise on local bear hunting regulations.
