ceives from the American public. You and I, by the millions, finally decide our national policies. If our country is to achieve a sound trade policy a great many of us must educate ourselves on the present day intricacies of international commerce.

Few of us have either the time or the inclination to study issues of this character by ourselves. We can, however, become informed on these matters painlessly, even pleasantly, if we take part in such discussion sessions as those which some Birmingham civic organizations are sponsoring right now.

Several Discussion Groups Among others is the stimulating panel chosen from its young membership by the Junior Chamber of Commerce to be presented publicly on next Thursday evening, Jan. 22, at eight o'clock at the Baldwin

Public Library. All are invited to the discussion. On the following Wednesday, which is January 28, at 8:30 at the Community House, a large rally is being held on world trade. The public is invited to that rally to hear some of the top executives of the import-export departments of the automobile, drug and sugar industries discuss the pros and cons of the foreign trade problem. You will miss a great deal if you fail to be present.

(Next week, in a final article, I will discuss the fact that the United States' interest in world trade is not a purely economic one, but has a much larger implication; that of world peace, without which none of this talk is important.)
