President of Walsh, James & Wasey Reminisces on Firm's 30th Anniversary

"From hitching posts to parking meters," in the way Donald D. James, president of Walsh, James & Wasey described the growth of Birmingham on the 30th anniversary of the firm's commencing this month.

"When I began selling real estate here," he recalled, "Woodward Avenue was unpaved from Detroit to Birmingham. The street here were gravel, rimmed by collections gutters and dotted with hitching posts. Large maples made a beautiful canopy over the street and it was with deep regret that citizens watched them go when progress demanded the widening of the street."

At the time there were few large estates in Birmingham, the George Bookle "Crabbrook" being the largest and finest. The church and schools of Crabbrook have come since that time. Among the first sales James made was the thousand-foot frontage on Pine Lake, owned by the Stoughton family. Birmingham's earliest settlers. This property was cut into small lots and sold to trappers.

The first subdivision contract of the company in Bloomfield Hills was "Oak Knolls." It was planned by Mr. and Mrs. Manley Davis, who still reside there. What is known as "Brookside Hills," on West Long Lake road, was an early favored haunt for hunters and trappers.

Walsh, James and Wasey also developed the Lone Pine road estate, now the home of several Birmingham families, and on Gilbert Lake, the "Shadow Acres," where George Wilson remodeled the old farm house on Quanton road. An old cemetery was located here, and Mr. James recalls that the Wilsons had to get permission of relatives of all the deceased buried there before he could move the graves.

Old City Limits
In speaking of the growth of Birmingham, itself, he said, "The bridge on West Maple marked the village limits. Not far beyond was the Quanton farm house on the north. This was later remodeled by Harry Mashburn, while directly across was the Rolla Coryell home and nursery, which still stands at the entrance to 'Coryell Park.'"

"To the west lay Quanton Lakes Estates" which was developed by that company, with Joe Mack as president. Puritan was the first street to be paved in this section, when Harry Mack, Bob Biggers, Sid Gilbreath and Larry Colgrove were about the only residents. Soon after this Lake Park, Pilgrim, Sunfield and Fairfax were paved. The saplings planted then are now large shade trees.

"It was about this time," he re-

How your Dollar makes a Home Run on a Single!

- The dollar you pay for a few pounds of coffee eventually goes to Brazil . . .
- But, it doesn't stay there. Brazil sends it on to Britain to pay for cloth . . .
- The dollar doesn't stay in Britain, either. Britain uses it to buy milk and cheese from Holland . . .
- The Dutch need machines from the U. S. So, the dollar comes home.

THIS STORY points out how U. S. money, spent overseas, may go 'round and 'round, but always comes back home.

Actually, your dollars never leave the U. S. They stay here in a bank, credited to the accounts of countries which sell us materials. As these countries buy things from us, they use this credit to pay for what they get. It's like business on Main Street . . . on a bigger scale.

With this in mind, it's easy to see the importance of our buying materials and goods from other countries. No sales to us, and they'll have no money to buy and pay for our products.

Soon, our expanded industries will be able to supply all the things we want . . . and more . . . and we'll need big world markets. Now's the time to start building those markets.
