HEAT INSURANCE for COAL USERS

Take Delivery of your COAL NOW!

Your coal merchant wants you to know why an order on the books, to be filled from future instead of present stocks, will not provide you with the protection which you should have—and which he always wants you to have.

He has no wish to be a scare-monger, but he is anxious to insure your comfort and health this winter, as in the past, with economical coal heat. For this reason, he points out that it would be wise and foresighted not merely to place your coal order now, but to permit him to deliver it to your home now.

Several factors, both present and probable, make it urgently advisable for you to get this winter's coal in your bins without delay:

- 1 Your coal merchant's supply, both in quantity and in kind, is ample at present. This may not be true when cold weather arrives, especially as regards choice of type and size.
2 Labor stoppages have cut coal production at the mines and it is earnestly hoped there will be no further interruptions of this kind.
3 Transportation facilities are more restricted now than for many years; mines served by many railroads, some of which have had no car shipments until now, are losing from 1 to 1 1/2 days' production per week.
4 Coal will again be called upon to fill the gaps made by forecast shortages of oil and gas, thus spreading the supply thinner.
5 Certain sections of Detroit's present Smoke Abatement Ordinance do not approve the sale of some types of coal which Detroit has used for years and which represents a large portion of our city's coal supply. Your home coal supply may be affected by this; consult your coal retailer, who is cooperating with your coal abatement to the fullest extent, for information as to whether the coal you use is in question.

P.S. If purchase of your coal supply now simplifies too great a strain on your summer budget, your coal retailer will probably be able to ease it for you. Consult him about an easier method of payment.
