In Artist Exhibition

Jack Carolin

Among those who will have work on display when Mrs. Paul Schaffer, Birmingham art teacher, gives her spring exhibit at the Community House, will be Jack Carolin. The youth, a student at the University of Detroit high school, is a private student of Mrs. Schaffer's. His favorite field of expression is hunting and fishing scenes in oil.

"The excellence of his work is outstanding for a boy of his age," Mrs. Schaffer said. "He has a sureness of stroke and a boldness of color which makes his work outstanding. His attention for detail and small things which can make or break a picture is fine."

In speaking of the exhibit, Mrs. Schaffer said that it would include the work of all her charges and will feature all types of art, modern and contemporary.

Defines "Art" "There are a number of persons who do not understand the difference between modern art, contemporary art and modernistic art," she said. "It is confusing especially in the way those who are familiar with it use the terms. "However, 'modern' is a term applied to technique or method of execution used in fine arts. A painting can be a hundred years old and still be modern art. It embraces boldness of color, does not use emotional appeal, as does the modernistic, for its central theme. It is the true expression of the personality of the times.

"Artistic 'Nightmares' "Contemporary refers to those paintings which are done by artists living today. They need not be modern, however, for the painter may use the methods and techniques of the ancient masters. "Of course we are all aware of the pictures termed 'nightmares' by many. They are composed of intricate lines with little apparent 'plot' and much color. This is a field entirely apart from all other methods of expression of the brush."

The exhibit will open at 4 o'clock on Saturday, May 15. Adult and junior classes will have pictures hung, and the public is invited.
