Interest in Local Choral Group Grows As Concert Nears

Birmingham's musical talents are put to few better uses than are found in the activities of the Birmingham Male Chorus, under the direction of Cranbrook's Robert Bates. The group has enjoyed a steady growth of appreciation among those in the city who appreciate fine music, especially the choral type of composition.

With the approach of their annual Spring Concert, to be held this year on April 29, the members have had a pleasant surprise in the ease with which advance sales have progressed.

This post-Easter appearance will be enhanced by the addition of co-guest stars Janet Martin and Maude Skinner, gifted two-piano team well known in Detroit and suburban concert circles. Aside from featured duets of the two pianists they will accompany the choral club in several numbers. The program will start at 8:30 p.m. with the traditional sacred music, in the singing of which this club has become proficient and will go on to the more spirited light moods, including selections from "Porgy and Bess," three sea choruses and as always, will include at least one of the old favorites of "charter members" of this group.

Details of the program will be announced shortly.
