Rezoning

Around The Cracker Barrel

His wife just knew he was smoking too much. Subtle suggestions were of no avail, and constant suggestion only made this confirmed pipe smoker grip the bit a little tighter. But something had to be done, or domestic harmony might be imperiled.

But two men from Birmingham didn't pass it by. They walked through the field, and found a gold mine. The old barn was made of pure white Michigan pine, clear and sound.

After some negotiations a bill of sale to the old barn was made out to Merle F. Bennett and Frank Hershey. It was theirs, and for the big sum of $75. Then followed weeks and months of hard work. Wrecking is no easy task for experts, and it is almost an impossible task for amateurs.

But even this came to an end, and finally this priceless lumber was safely stored. Then came the thrill of making that aged and beautiful lumber into things of beauty. Extremely careful study was made of fine antique pieces, measurements were carefully taken, and months were devoted to the study of the finish.

Mrs. Hershey moved away from Birmingham. He went to Rochester, where he developed a craft business in fine metal reproductions. Mr. Bennett continued with his pine. Many of you people in Birmingham have pieces created by Merle Bennett. His fame locally has grown, and his fame nationally is commencing.

Recently Mr. Bennett's work has attracted interest from other sections of the country. He has been besieged with requests from people wanting to know where it can be obtained. Something had to be done, and something has been done. Mr. Bennett has decided that his handwork will be available in limited quantities through certain outstanding retail outlets.

When this paper is in your hands the first complete exhibit of the soon famous Pesty Hill Pine will be on display at the Village Store. Come in and see these pieces. As we will have only a limited quantity of the pine, because every piece is handmade, we ask all those who want to buy, to please leave the piece they select in the store until Saturday afternoon. Then it can be yours.
