

BIRTH OF A VOLCANO—Steam rising from a snowcapped mountain in South America indicates the discovery of a hitherto unknown volcano atop Cerro de Parícuta, a peak rising to a height of 20,000 feet, exactly on the border between Bolivia and Chile.

HE NEVER SAW A PURPLE COW—Of one of any other color, for that matter. Six-year-old Jimmie Johnson, strictly a city boy from Chicago, stares with rapt fascination at a pair of Holsteins on the farm of M. L. Klock, of Hampshire, Ill. Later on his visit, Jimmie asked to see the "chocolate milk cows." Ains, Farmer Klock had none in stock.

BURYING THE HATCHET—Taking their cue from the Atlantic Treaty, eight Indian nations from the Northwest have signed a friendship pact. Above, Cleveland Kamiakin, representing Yakima Indians now living on the Colville Reservation in Idaho, affixes his thumbprint to the treaty in Yakima, Wash., assisted by Ann George. The pact marks the first such alliance of Northwest Indians in history.

GREAT SPORT—New Zealanders are zealous about the bow and arrow sport, and this attractive archer is no exception. She's taking a bead on the bull's-eye in preparation for the New Zealand Archery championships. She may run out of arrows, but should have no trouble keeping a beau.

SPECIAL DELIVERY—Sally Gastle, 18, of Buffalo, N. Y., coaxes this day-old orphaned fawn into accepting a rag of goat milk. The baby buck's mother was impaled and killed when trying to jump an iron picket fence in a cemetery. Two police officers, noticing movement in the carcass, used amateur surgery to deliver the fawn.

CHOSEN DAIRY QUEEN—Nancy E. Kendall, 20, of West Springfield, Mass., demonstrates her milking technique after winning the title of June Dairy Month Queen of her state. Miss Kendall is a junior at the University of Massachusetts. The cow, contemplating the camera, seems to find the whole affair is utterly ridiculous.
