Speakers Stress the Need of Learning Each Other's Language

By Doris E. Kus

"Si, señores" and "muy buenos" were heard throughout the room last Friday when members of the Ruth Shain International Affairs Class were host to Latin-American delegates of the Inter-American Bar Association which has been meeting in Detroit. Colorful Mexican grass mats and hand woven baskets provided the background for chrysanthemums and crimson geraniums which decorated the tables and the stage.
Seated at the speakers table were a group of Latin-Americans, their hostess, Mrs. Shain, Mayor Don Bell, the Rev. Harold E. Towne and W. Coit Allee.
Mrs. Shain introduced Mrs. Howard Liverance, president of the Community House; Mrs. H. D. Harris, president of the Woman's Club, and Mrs. H. McKenzie, president of the AAUW. After Mayor Bell spoke briefly in welcome, Mrs. Shain introduced the first speaker.
Dr. Fernando Fournier of Costa Rica, assistant general secretary of the Inter-American Bar Association, began with apologizing for his English. "I had some doubts about my language, but it is better to say a few things in one language than to say many silly things in many languages."
He spoke of the Rio Treaty in relation to his country. He stressed the racial unity of the one million population of his second smallest country in the Western Hemisphere and pointed out that the population is purely Spanish and that the few negroes who live in Costa Rica, speak English, and not Spanish.
Freedom of Press
He continued with "Costa Rica is purely democratic. It is proud that it has more school teachers than soldiers. It is blessed with freedom of press and thought and its government." He reflected on the Costa Rican revolution last year and told the group that it was done to rid the country of a bad president and that to do it, Costa Rica had employed the help of the Rio Treaty. He then pointed out that now the Western Hemisphere had an international body to keep peace among the countries.
Doctora Remy Madeiros da Fonseca, a lawyer in her native country, Brazil, made her speech in Portuguese which was translated into English by another guest. Dr. Segadine spoke of her country, the third largest in the world, said it was a democratic country emulated after that of the United States. And with true Brazilian humor, she remarked, "We too had an election at which everyone thought ours would be a Republican president. And, as you people, we too were surprised to find we had just elected a democratic president."
Learn the Language
Her main point was that if the United States doesn't know enough about South America, it is because of the language difference, and urged that the study of languages be brought into sharp focus because of the importance of understanding each other more completely.
Doctora Fonseca also said that Brazil needs a League of Women Voters such as one organized here, and expressed her belief that it would help towards the understanding of democracy and to the comprehension of governmental problems. She finished by saying she "hoped the United States has a woman president someday soon and that Brazil has a League of Women Voters."
W. Coit Allee spoke briefly of the Inter-American Bar Association and was followed by the Ecuadorian representative in the Washington, D.C. embassy, Fernando Cordova, who said "All in the Americas have the same flag, really, and that flag stands for democracy, the respect and freedom of each other. And a symbol of common democracy, I should like to present the Ecuadorian flag to Mrs. Shain."
Remarkable Work
Dr. Rosalind Bates of Los Angeles, president of the International Federation of Women Lawyers, ing woman, and finished with "to respect the right of others is to have peace. If we know each other, we will then respect each other and then there will no longer be a problem of war."

Dr. Felix Navarro of Peru opened his talk by explaining that Peru is asking for help from the States not in the form of money, but for teachers and priests and cultural assistance. He explained that of the 7 million population, five million are Indian, only two million are white and that the Indians are resisting modern improvements and 20th century customs, that they work the soil just to make a living with no progressive ambitions. Therefore, Peru offers a great opportunity to be explored and developed.
Mrs. George M. Morris of Washington, D.C. described the new "Washington World Affairs Center" which has recently been organized as a kind of information clearing house on international affairs.
Cuba's Portuando Castro was another who stressed the importance of knowing another country's language. He commended the Foreign Policy Association and explained that his country's budget for education was higher than that of the army, that Cuba wants to trade its produce with other countries and that his government is truly democratic. "Cuba will ally itself with all democratic powers whenever it is necessary," he ended.
America's first newspaper was established in 1764.
