Lamb or Veal Riblets Ideal Barbecued Fare

If barbecued meats are favorites in your family, try barbecuing some of the less familiar cuts.

Most folks include barbecued spare-ribs, short-ribs, frankfurters or ground beef on their menus regularly. But very few know how really good veal or lamb riblets cut from the breast can be when barbecued. Just as spare-ribs, they are an informal food, and are best for finger eating, so you may even want to serve them at one of Junior's "gang" parties some time.

To cook the riblets at their best, make the barbecue sauce up ahead of time, or perhaps you make up a double recipe each time you barbecue and already have some on hand. Start the riblets cooking in a slow oven (300° F.), for about half an hour, then pour sauce over meat. Baste the meat occasionally throughout the cooking period, usually about 2 hours.
