HORSE SENSE AND NONSENSE

By ALICE E. MORGAN

THREAT TO PROGRESS

According to a lot of people, satisfaction is one of the major causes in the death of progress. Since this refers to persons, we have no immediate fear of progress dying in this country.

You'll find plenty of evidence to convince you that as a whole, we are still a long way from complete satisfaction in this country. The tenant howls to high heaven because his rents are too high. The landlord claims rents are so low because he is really put to it to pay his taxes and the upkeep on his property.

The farmer looks the situation over and dreams longingly of big checks the factory worker takes home. The factory worker looks at his check, thinks of what he's going to pay for rent, food, clothing and fuel and wonders why in the dickens he ever left the farm.

THE MARRIED WOMAN sighs over the sink full of dirty dishes and the unmade bed and envies the child young thing en route to the office. She, while passing all the snug little homes in the neighborhood, and she continues her education and was a school teacher. The teacher thinks how wonderful life would be in the factory, just dealing with mite machines all day instead of the questions the children can dream up.

The girl in the factory wishes she had continued her education and was a school teacher. The teacher thinks how wonderful life would be in the factory, just dealing with mite machines all day instead of the questions the children can dream up.

The pastor of the church casts a dismal look at his old car and a wistful look at the deacon's new one. The deacon, just that morning, had taken a glance at his pledge card and wishes now he hadn't made it quite so much. After all, the pastor's expenses aren't nearly as high as his are.

CHILDREN LOOK at their parents and wish they were grown up.

With an increasing number of farmers operating tractors at night, a special sealed-beam headlight for the tractor has been developed. Its lens is designed to concentrate the light on the area immediately ahead of the machine.

so they could do as they wished. The father looks at his children and thinks how wonderful it would be able to play all day and do whatever struck your fancy instead of having to go to work and take care of the house.

It's just one great, big fat wish. Everyone is wishing he were someone else, doing something else and living somewhere else. Do they really want these other things—or do they just think they do?

How about the tenant? He pays his rent and files his complaints. It's up to the landlord to see that the water runs and the roof doesn't leak. He has to worry about the cracked plaster in the living room and the sagging step on the front porch.

DOES THE FARMER really want to trade places with the factory worker? Would he enjoy being cooped up with noisy machines all day? Would the factory worker like the hours the average farmer works, in broiling sun or freezing winds?

The women hardly want to trade places. The factory worker would not like trying to get along on the teacher's wages and the teacher would not care anything about all those dirty dishes.

The housewife would go crazy in the noisy factory and she'd get very tired of a varied assortment of someone else's children, too. The pastor, on second thought, isn't too sure he would care to trade his life for the dog-out-dog routine of competitive business.

THE DEACON, after he thinks the thing through, doubts that he could stand up under the strain which is placed on his pastor's shoulders.

With envy, Sonny watches Dad get in the car and drive off to the club. Would he like dad's care and worries? He doubts it. Dad, as he drives away and sees a wistful look in the boy's eyes, decides being a kid has its drawbacks, too. When you get right down to bedrock, we're all pretty well off right where we are. We can see a lot of things about the other fellow's job that are worse than the worst in our own. Well, maybe progress in the country is threatened a bit, after all. We review and decide our own little corner's a pretty good one but—well, fuggins, it is sure would be fun to fly one of those jets!

TEXAS TOBACCO— Hoping that these small and climate will prove suitable for large scale tobacco-growing, L. W. Adams examines a healthy looking crop on his farm near San Antonio, Adams, who has farmed tobacco in Kentucky, says these plants look as good as any he has raised in the "Blue Grass" state.
