Markers like these pay silent tribute to the affection which owners have for their pets. Hundreds of dogs and cats are interred in this Southfield pet cemetery, located on Grand River avenue between 10 Mile and Halsted roads. Attractive markers, well kept graves and floral tributes show how many owners hold their pets in high esteem.

SOUTHFIELD—That owners do not forget their pets after their too-short lives have ended, is evidenced by the large pet cemetery on Grand River avenue, between 10 Mile and Halsted roads.

Here, well kept graves and many headstones, attest to the love which has existed between pet and master in hundreds of cases. It is the resting place of loved pets, aristocrats of dogdom and catdom, as well as their more lowly brothers and sisters of varied ancestry. The only requirement is a loving master.

It is a silent tribute to the love in which these pets were held. Some have lived their lives as just pets. Some have graced show benches, and leave tangible evidence behind them of having won their place in the world. Some have been loved because of their devotion to children and elderly persons in the family.

Tribute to Pets
 Some of the dogs buried here have been workers, guarding property and lives. Others have served their tour of duty in the field, obedient to the signal of the hunter to stand, flush and retrieve game.

Their past really makes no difference, for the reasons for keeping and loving a dog are as many means. They have lived their lives surrounded by varied circumstances, but always by the love of their owners.

The cemetery is kept as a standing tribute to each and every animal it holds. The expanse of grass is dotted with many headstones, and made bright with blooming plants and neat hedges. Markers often carry the name of the pet, along with the date of birth and death, and the name of the owner. Some are engraved with what the owners considered fitting tributes to their pets.

During these bleak months of the year, owners place baskets of bright flowers on the graves, along with permanent wreaths and in some cases, blankets of myrtle. The summer months find it with growing plants, thriving under the expert care of the caretaker.

Secondary Schools to Start Classes 10 Minutes Earlier Beginning Jan. 30

Because of overloaded buses, the problem of having noon lunches in cafeterias, particularly in Parnum School, and the advantages of an earlier dismissal for athletic events in the senior high school, it has been decided that the secondary schools will begin classes 10 minutes earlier. "All classes will begin at 8:20 a.m. and school will be dismissed at 3:30 p.m.," Superintendent of Schools Dwight B. Ireland said yesterday. The change becomes effective Monday, Jan. 30.

There will be three noon lunch periods of 20 minutes each and one-third of the students will be dismissed for each lunch period.

Will Solve Overloading
 All buses serving the secondary schools will start their morning runs ten minutes earlier. This will permit a second run for elementary school pupils according to the present schedule.
