Many CARE Packages Aid German Families To Put More Calories Into Meals

By ROBERT BALL

STUTTGART, West Germany. Somewhere in the United States last week, a man wrote a check for $10. Today in West Germany, it is a check for 10 marks. It is a check for CARE, the worldwide, person-to-person relief agency.

Richard Bauer, a package of food was delivered. Between these two events stands CARE, the worldwide, person-to-person relief agency.

Four years old this year, CARE was founded as a non-profit organization by 26 major American relief agencies. The purpose was to provide a safe and sure channel for Americans to send food to friends and relatives abroad.

THE BEGINNING was made with surplus Army "10 in 1" rations. Soon CARE had warehouses and distributing offices in 17 stricken countries, including Czechoslovakia and the Russian Zones of Germany and Austria.

Problems were solved as they came up. When the "10 in 1" packs ran out, CARE began buying food in bulk for its own dietetically planned $10 package.

When CARE discovered that foods that were welcome in Greece left Philippine housewives mystified, the staff worked out an assortment of packages, keyed to local tastes in food.

Contents are constantly being revised to cram in more food value or to take advantage of price changes.

PRINCIPAL TARGET for the food of $100 million worth of food packages has always been Germany, and at present about 60 percent of the shipments land there.

This is no favoritism of CARE officials; it simply shows that more Americans send packages to Germany than elsewhere.

CARE people explain it on the basis of the large number of German-Americans who have relatives in the Old Country.

About 80 percent of the CARE contributors specify the person who is to receive the package, but the donor of Richard Bauer's package did not.

Consequently, the selection fell to CARE and CARE's German partner, a council of the four big German relief organizations.

THIS COUNCIL compiles lists of the neediest families in each vicinity and the CARE warehouses take over from there.

No one could doubt Richard Bauer's need. Quellentrassé 92 proved to be one of a line of low-chert settlement houses facing a weed-thicket vacant lot.

With only three rooms and a kitchen for the parents and eight children, even sleeping becomes a problem.

At present the six youngest Bauers sleep in one bedroom, the oldest boy, who is 17, on a couch in the second bedroom, the parents on a day bed in the living room.

The second oldest boy is staying with relatives; there just isn't room for him at home.

BAUER'S MISFORTUNE is a phosphorus burn on his left arm, suffered in a night bombing raid in 1944. The doctors at the unemployment commission decided 65 percent disability, but the firm for which he had worked offered to take him back on trial.

Bauer worked himself from 135 pounds down to 95, trying to keep up, but at last the factory had to let him go. Since then he has been out of work.

"I can understand it," he said bitterly. "Who wants a one-armed machinist?"

The city, which has given jobs to many disabled workers, turned thumbs down on Bauer because of his eight children.

City employees receive wage boosts for each child, and the unemployed officials seek out the job candidates with fewest children.

MRS. BAUER'S problem of feeding nine persons on a weekly allowance of $10 will be eased as long as the contents of the CARE package last, but problems of clothing remain.

"The oldest boy hasn't had an overcoat for the last three winters," Mrs. Bauer said. "We hope this winter he can have one that my cousin has. It belonged to her husband who has been listed missing since Stalingrad. She kept the coat, hoping he might come back, but if she has no news by this fall, we're to get the coat."

Back at CARE'S Stuttgart office, Assistant Director George Mathies took a look at the record and a look at the future.

"UP TO LAST YEAR our volume of deliveries in Germany rose steadily," he said. "This year it's dropped off a little, but we still deliver 12,500 packages a month in the U. S. Zone alone.

"I guess we'll be on the job for quite a while yet. It looks as if there were still plenty of people who need help."
