Women Voters Study Birmingham Musicales Benefit Concert Scheduled for March 23

The League of Women Voters met Monday in three unit discussion groups to study the Federal budget. Two charts showing how the money is spent and from where it receives its income were on display at the meeting.

Mrs. Harry Markle, resource chairman, and her committee consisting of Mrs. Paul Howerton, W. A. Hamby, Mrs. William James, Mrs. Peter Lewis, Mrs. E. W. Pugh, Mrs. John St. Clair, Mrs. Elsie Swartz and Mrs. Philip Hart, explained how the budget is made up and the different steps necessary before it is finally approved by Congress.

Mrs. Alfred McKeown, state economic chairman of the League, was guest of the local organization and spoke briefly about the forming of the Council of Economic Advisors.

The general opinion was that the United States national defense program could not afford drastic reductions; that this country should watch its spending in a domestic program when facing a large program of reconstruction abroad; that veterans' share should not be allowed to go any higher and that although it was necessary that to have a system of deficit financing at present, this should not be allowed to go on over a long period of time.

Around The Cracker Barrel

This is the week of the year when every editor in the land says to some reporter: "Write a story on the income tax." And in a few hours when the story is dumped back on the editor's desk, he will pick it up, glance through, and try to determine whether it is presumably humorous, or whether it is flag-waving. For every income tax story seems to fall into either class. Mr. Reporter just doesn't go any farther than either writing a comical sketch on the language of the act, or writing a story in stirring notes to the effect that no matter what the cost, it's worth it.

But both of these techniques are backeyed, and the public eyes both types with uninterested calm. People are more sophisticated about the tax now than when the rate was 1 1/2%. That's right, 1 1/2%. They can neither see the humor in layer upon layer of technical language, nor are they inclined to stand up and shout in patriotic enthusiasm.

Just as Lancelot was warned of the Ides of March, and received a caesar in his back, there is a growing and lurking feeling that there's something to the statement "that the power to tax is the power to destroy."

If you go shopping in the Village Store—or any other store—you don't purchase anything unless it fills a need, and unless you think it is worth the asking price. If you didn't buy that way you'd be broke. But you and I go on year after year buying—and paying for—a government which is so far removed from us that we just don't know what we're getting. We haven't the time to know what's going on. And unless we're careful we may go broke anyway.

You and I haven't got time to learn about our government. For we have to work so hard to make a living for our families that there is no time left. One of the reasons we have to work so hard is because we have to pay such high taxes. We'll never get them down unless we take time to better study the problem, and we don't dare take the time. Under this dilemma we get no place. This is sort of like the country preacher who upraised the country merchant for not putting more in the collection plate, with the merchant retorting that since the preacher had talked everyone out of chewing tobacco that he had no income to put in said collection plate.

And if you don't know too much about the whole thing you can also be sure that our representatives in Congress don't either. For government has become so complex, in far reaching in its interests, that Congressmen too have had to become specialists. Our congressman may be on the Harbors & Waterways Committee. He spends his spare time working on problems of this committee, rushes into the chamber to vote, and then goes back to his office to listen to some delegation of pressure artists seeking some personal advantage. Comes the time to mend his political fences and he comes back home ready to make speeches on any possible subject. And most congressmen are no better informed about what goes on in Congress than the man who stays home and reads the Congressional Record once a week.

We're going to continue adding up how much we owe Uncle Sam on every March 15. And we're going to continue to reach for the aspirin bottle unless we take the time to learn more about it. It's one of those things that someone else can't do for you; for if that someone else does it for you, he'll do it for others too. And pretty soon no one is taking any interest, just as now.

One of the strange paradoxes of American life is the fact that we only get excited when poor government affects our pocket book. Maybe that isn't so strange after all. For the money we earn to pay our taxes is earned by exchanging a part of our life for that money. If you spend three months of every year working to pay those taxes, then you are contributing a quarter of each year to that purpose—and you can't get it back.

One of the troubles with most of us is that we scream before we know the possible answer. That's why the professional politician has it all over us. We rise in righteous indignation, we lunge en masse to the nearest depot of government, and when we get there we launch our complaint and get a long-winded "explanation". We don't know the answers to the politicians. The only person a politician fears is one who knows what he's talking about, who has a suggested remedy as well as a squawk.

The League of Women Voters, in Birmingham is doing a lot to educate our ladies on the problems of government. How about a League of Men Voters, or a Citizen's League? The staff could be recruited from the unemployed, and perhaps in time we can get some place. The voters should know as much about the principles of government as does the elected representative, and only when we approximate such knowledge will we get better government. Only then will the 15th of March become a day when we feel privileged to pay our share. For only then will we know that we are getting our money's worth, and are not on the road to ruin.
