

You often hear it said, these days, that "everybody's out after the easy buck—so why should I worry about the bad way things are going?" Well, that's a negative way to build one's own security and happiness. Easy ways really end uneasily.

ABOVE IS A VIEW of the meadow and Querton Dam looking from the new West Maple bridge as submitted to the city commission by Wilcox and Laird, consulting landscape architects. Plans were approved for the development of the Baldwin Park area by commissioners last week. Architects stated that when motorists pass over the bridge this fall, they will gaze upon "a lovely vista of meadow, multi-colored trees, with the old Querton dam and Rouge river in the background." Actual landscaping work is being conducted by the Birmingham forestry and parks department, under supervision of William R. Lebold. Existing trees have been used as much as possible and some have been trimmed and others removed. The meadow has been diaced and harrowed and grass was planted last week.
