

List Purposes Of White House Conference

Purposes of the White House Conference were outlined to the Community Council at its Nov. 29 meeting by Miss Evangeline Shelby, official delegate to the conference last year.

Emphasis of the conference was on family life and education, she reported, with youth being included as participants in planning and being represented on community activities. It was felt, she said, that exposing young people to community planning would be valuable experience for them and get them to take on civic responsibilities.

According to Miss Shelby, there are three phases of the White House Conference. First is the preparatory phase in which the local committee study their needs and refer them to a state group who in turn refer them to the national group.

THE SECOND phase is the conference itself. The White House Conference is held once every ten years in Washington, she said the last one being held about a year ago with more than 6000 delegates of professional people and parents attending.

The last phase is the follow up in which efforts are made to implement the White House recommendations through existing organizations. The conference tries to stimulate local activity in study and action as related to the needs of the community, Miss Shelby stated, and effective team work is necessary to mobilize the forces for youth.

Mrs. Hollister Mabley, chairman of the Youth Council, reported that the organization of this group is an outgrowth of two previous studies made by Community Council committees, one being on the community needs and services to children and the other the recreational survey.

THE YOUTH COUNCIL gives particular attention to recreation so that there is no overlapping and the various activities for children and youth are coordinated. Youth is being represented on the council, she said, with 12 students from the 7th-12th grades.

At the present time, Mrs. Mabley stated, they are working on a recreational program for the new high school so that each student will "make the new high school his, and feel that he is important in it."

Examine revamped emergency number page in new phone book.

Phone Users Must List Emergency Numbers

The Michigan Bell Telephone Company has started distribution of more than 23,000 copies of the new Birmingham-Bloomfield Hills telephone directory.

Walter B. Fauser, Michigan Bell manager, called subscribers' attention to the new feature appearing on the emergency number page of the new book.

Being tried by the company as a means in cutting down the margin of error in making emergency telephone calls, the new emergency number page now contains spaces at the top where subscribers can write in the numbers of the police and fire departments serving their own community.

The Birmingham-Bloomfield Hills book also contains the alphabetical listings for Pontiac, Royal write in their own fire number in the large spaces on the top of the new page, precious time will be saved in making emergency calls. We hope this will result in less property damage and a reduction in the peril of lives by fire," Fauser said in an appeal to telephone users.

The manager emphasized Michigan Bell's desire to assist fire departments in combating "very real and human mistakes when disaster strikes and panicky calls for help must be made under considerable stress.

"We hope the new page is a partial solution to the problem and is of real assistance when it is needed most," he said.
