The Joyous Season . . .

For almost two thousand years people of the Christian world have gained renewed hope at Eastertide. Mindful of that seeming miracle when our Lord rose from the dead, Easter has become the symbol of the rebirth of faith and hope.

In this year of troubles, when so much of what we treasured seems to be slipping from us, may we have the good fortune to again inwardly feel a resurgence of faith in the ideals we have held most dear, and hope for their attainment.

On this Easter day may we singly and collectively rededicate ourselves to the imperative task of bringing back to ourselves our former way of life. May we strive to more closely evaluate the things we seek, to expect and insist upon honor and honesty in our government, to be charitable only to those things we believe right.

Realizing that might does not always make right, remembering that small band of the faithful who refused to bow to the might of Caesar, may we on this Easter Day have that "new birth of freedom" within us, and obtain an inner strength which will help us all in going back to those principles upon which our freedom was founded.

Then, when we have once again regained those treasures of freedom and common sense which we have let slip from us, Easter will once again be the season of great joy and thanksgiving.
