4 'Little Hoover' Recommendations Criticized

Recommendations of Michigan's Little Hoover Commission which would centralize authority in the governor's office were attacked by D. Hale Brake, State Treasurer, in a speech before the Birmingham Hi-Twelve club Monday night.

Centralization of authority, regardless of what party was in power, would be "contrary to Michigan's tradition and intentionally decentralized government," he said.

er takes sides and never blames either party in a marriage difficulty, according to Miss Martin. Her approach is strikingly different from friends or relatives who generally expect to justify the particular member with whom they happen to be identified.

THE QUESTIONS brought to the Family Service concern the common problems of everyday life, but advice given is individual and confidential. Questions asked of family problems are usually too personal for general advice to be of much help.

THE PRESENT Family Service of Oakland County is the result of the merger in January, 1930, of the former Family Service Center for the Pontiac, Birmingham and Bloomfield Area and the former Family Service Association of Southern Oakland County. Other offices of the agency are in Pontiac and Royal Oak.

chance for a continuing policy. If the director of the Agricultural Commission were under the control of the governor, this chance would be lessened.

"I don't know if any governor going all through the state, could have found any better man for these offices than the people already recommended to be appointed by the governor."

"MICHIGAN," he continued, "has always prided itself on the fact that the conservation department was not bothered by partisan politics and because of this the department was able to have a continuing policy. It has now been recommended that the director of conservation be appointed by the governor."

"Michigan's government is probably more decentralized than any of the 48 states," he said. "The Administrative Board which some states do not do," he emphasized.

"IF WE DESTROY the administrative council of elected officials and have one of appointed officials, they wouldn't be worth their salt," Brake declared.

"Our state government has been infinitely better because of the administrative council. We should hesitate before changing. We should have the people's voice in the Little Hoover Bill force runs into the hundreds," Brake said.

"Some of them are very good and should have been done long ago. Generally speaking, however, they are not matters of re-organization of the government, but of procedure, making for more efficiency and improvement," he concluded.
